

Vam Bowne's vespects to his Friend Sam! Mille 5 th Mo: 1800_

A C C O U N T

OFTHE

L I F E

AND

RELIGIOUS LABOURS

OF

SARAH GRUBB.

WITH AN

A P P E N D I X,

CONTAINING AN ACCOUNT OF THE

SCHOOLS AT ACKWORTH AND YORK,

Observations on Christian discipline, and extracts from many of her

L E T T E R S.

JOHN vi. 12.

Gather up the Fragments that remain, that Nothing be lost.

T R E N T O N: PRINTED BY ISAAC COLLINS.

M. DC C. XCY.

CONTENTS.

CHAP. I.

Her Education.—Divine Visitations.—Conflict arising from her natural Vivacity, &c.—Solid State of her Mind in the early Part of Life.—Exercises about the Time of her first Appearance in the Ministry.—Visit to Part of the Counties of Westmoreland and Cumberland.—Visit to the Meetings of Cheshire and a Part of those in Lancashire, &c.

CHAP. II.

Her Marriage—and Journey into Scotland, Cumberland, &c.

CHAP. III.

Visit to her Husband's Relations in Ireland.— Journey into Norfolk, &c.—Visit to the Meetings of Friends in Ireland.

CHAP. IV.

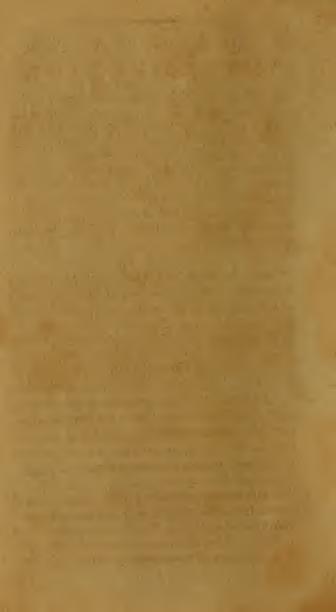

Visit to some of the Western Counties of England.

CHAP. V.

Family Visit at Sheffield.—Illness there.—Consideration of removing into Ireland.— Journey into Lincoln-shire.—Removal to Ireland.—Journey into Holland, Germany, and France.

CHAP. VI.

Her Concern respecting a Boarding School for Female Youth.—Visit to Friends Families in Cork.—Journey to London.—Visit to Dunkirk, Holland, Pyrmont, &c.—Her Return—and Decease.—Testimonies concerning her.

INTRODUCTION.

S few lives have exhibited a more pure example of piety and virtue, than that which is fet forth in the ensuing pages, it has been thought right to bring it forward to general notice; under a hope, that an account of this humble, felf-denying, and dedicated servant, will prove the means of instructing others; and of strengthening their faith in the efficacy of that Divine Principle, "which wrought all her works in her."

It will be proper to inform the reader, that the materials from which this work is composed, consist of journals written by herself of her travels through Scotland, Ireland, and some of the western counties in England, and of a considerable number of letters to some of her intimate friends. From these last have been extracted such parts, as were descriptive of her other labours and travels, or likely to be of publick use. A connexion of the different events and circumstances, has been made throughout, by short narratives or explanations; but great care has been taken to preserve, as much as could be, her own words and arrangements.

Those extracts of letters which do not appear to have a peculiar connexion with the narrative, and which could not have been regularly introduced there, have been collected together, and are, nearly in the order of time, inserted in the Appendix.

A 3 The

The importance of their subjects, and their instructive tendency, it is apprehended, will render them an acceptable addition to the other part of the work. Although, from the time of her engagement in the ministry, she was greatly dedicated, and much employed in various religious fervices during the remainder of her days; yet, for want of materials left by herfelf, an account of many of these is omitted in the following work; which it feemed proper to confine, almost throughout, to fuch part of her life and labours as could be collected from her own writings. It may not be improper to observe also, that this mode of composing a narrative, by extracts from letters, will fometimes be, unavoidably, attended with a want of close connexion, and with a degree of repetition: but as this was the only way by which a material part of her labours could be brought into view, it is hoped that these circumstances will not be deemed of much confequence; and that the deeply instructive nature of her literary correspondence, will fufficiently warrant its publication.

THE

L I F E.

OF

SARAH GRUBB.

CHAP. I.

Her Education.—Divine Visitations.—Conflict arising from her natural Vivacity, &c.—Solid State of her Mind in the early Part of Life.—Exercises about the Time of her first Appearance in the Ministry.
—Visit to Part of the Counties of Westmoreland and Cumberland.—Visit to the Meetings of Cheshire, and a Part of those in Lancashire, &c.

SARAH GRUBB, daughter of William and Elizabeth Tuke, was born at York in Great Britain, 20th of 6th month, in the year 1756.

In her tender years she was deprived of her mother, who was removed from her by death, before A 4 she was five years old: but her father marrying again about the tenth year of her age, this loss was, from that time, abundantly compensated by the maternal care and regard of a second mother; of whose tenderness, and solicitude for her best welfare, she has left many grateful and affectionate testimonials.

The watchful and religious education with which the was favoured, proved as a hedge round about her, and, under divine care, preferved her during that dangerous feafon of life, from the many corruptions and follies, that abound in the world, and to which unguarded young people are forrowfully exposed. In the days of her youth, she was often made fensible of the goodness of her heavenly Father, and her eyes anointed to see the emptiness and delusion of all worldly enjoyments, and to behold the beauty which there is in the truth; and strong desires were often raised in her mind, that she might be thoroughly refined, and, even at the loss of every thing else, be made to possess the pearl of great price.

These gracious extensions of divine regard met with great opposition from the liveliness of her disposition, and the strength of her natural powers; which occasioned the self-denying meekness and simplicity of the christian life, to be to her an hard attainment; and many painful struggles she experienced, before she was made willing to yield up every facrifice, and to follow her Lord whithersoever he might be pleased to lead.

During the last illness of that eminent minister, John Woolman, she was, at times favoured to wait upon and affist him. His faith and patience, with the sweet favour of his pure spirit, made a deep and profitable impression on her mind; exemplifying the power and goodness of that divine hand, which she felt secretly at work in her own heart, calling her to newness of life, and holiness before the Lord. It was to her that this valuable friend, when near the close of life, addressed those comfortable expressions, which, indeed, may be called a blessing: "My child, thou seems very kind to me, a poor creature; the Lord will reward thee for it."

A deep fense of the purity of the divine life, and a lively feeling of her own frailties, joined to an earnest concern that she might become fully purified in heart and life, caused great circumspection and fear, and made her often go mourning on her way. This appears from the following extracts of divers letters to her friends, written in early life, which, in some measure, shew the exercise, and state of her mind, at that period; and which may be acceptable, as they serve to exhibit the beginnings and gradations of that work, which conspicuously marked the future periods of her life.

1772.——" I feel thy bearing with my weak-nesses, and thy candor in judging of them, which makes me the more ready to communicate what I feel. Oh could I tell thee, it would be comfortable! But that which is felt and not understood, cannot be described; and, indeed, I begin to think a state of insensibility to what is good is approaching. I may truly fay I dread it. May I, by that fear, guard the more; yet my infirmities feem fo just a cause, that they are numerous enough to depress the little life that is left."

A

1772.—" Thine has excited in me the warmeft wishes for the extendings of divine bounty, to be enabled, with refignation and fortitude, to do, bear, or suffer, whatever it may please the Father of spirits to inflict upon me. Yet I cannot but, with conscious forrow, own the truth of thy remark, concerning a too great anxiety for a larger portion of the descendings of the Father's love, than is suitable in the fight of an omniscient Deity."

1773. "I feem recovering from my late illness, and have favourable symptoms for life; but for what kind of a one I know not. I am at a loss to fay whether it is a pleasing, or a painful prospect. I feel the effects of both, and am ready to countenance the latter, knowing there is fomething in my nature, which is loth to be subjected under that power, which ought to actuate every part of our demeanour; and there is nothing, that I know of, fo contrary to my natural will, as that patiently waiting, and quietly hoping, which thou mentions; it being, certainly, preparatory to the work of reformation in us; and if this be rightly performed, no mundane enjoyment would be adequate to the foretaste of that confummate felicity, which I believe is the refult of fo defirable a work: and, indeed, without fome degree of that bleffing, even in my unworthy state, this life, would be little superior to that for which I should look. But O this glimpse of hope, how ready are we to catch, though the twig be ever fo flender, and the prospect ever so faint! yet there is a danger of being deluded, as the Adversary is ever ready to attack the weak part, and that is one which is generally exposed, there being room in the human breast for such prepossessions. I acquiesce with thee, that it is in silence we enjoy advantage, and in solitude we muse the wonders of unsearchable wisdom. Could we but partake of a larger share of retirement, I am sensible the works of an almighty hand would have a greater influence, and the mind would not be so alienated from this source, this pleasing source of every joy."

how

1773.——" Surely the commemoration of the goodness of infinite wisdom, in favouring a large share of the youth of our fociety with a virtuous and fober education, ought to inspire us with a willingness to imitate the bright examples we have, rather than those, whose loss we should compassionate; for many are the irreligious principles, that the Adverfary is endeavouring to fuggest in the minds of youth, more especially when they are exposed to the tempestuous billows of an unstable world; but happy is it for those that refist the temptations, and furmount the difficulties: if any may look to the recompense of reward, 'tis certainly they. But for my part, I am often afraid left I should grow like the heath in the defert, that knoweth not when good cometh; or that the manifold favours should prove, as water fpilt upon a stone; for I am sure there is a hardness in the natural heart, not easily penetrated; and though I experimentally confess it, yet I hope there are many, on the other hand, who can fay, they witness the returning from their gatherings with friends, as arising from the washing pool."

1774. "We certainly reap the greatest advantages from a friend, when the mind and natural flow of spirits are most depressed. It is at these feafons we hear the intelligible language of fympathy, in its pleafing notes, and look upon friendship in its exalted station. A view of these enjoyments excited me to taste their fruits, (which are the difclosure of our minds) by opening the fountain of forrows, and unlocking the fpring of painful feelings. That they may overflow the banks of my pleasures, and bring down the tall cedars of Lebanon, laying waste the hills and the mountains, and establishing in the room, that Rock whereon the church must be built, is the swaying inclination of my heart. But how apt are we to turn our feet from the path which is narrow; being unwilling to make ftraight steps, a thing most repugnant to our unregenerate wills! We therefore cull out every discouragement, and stumble at the smallest stone; each prospect appearing in its gloomiest colours, or rather, our eyes being dimmed by the glitter of worldly objects, and inexperienced in the joys accruing from faithfulness, we see them not."

1775.—"Though trials and conflicts are allotted to the faithful followers, yet they rife, as with ftones of memorial, from the bottom of Jordan; when alas! I, and fuch like, instead of being benefitted by these baptisms, find them unpleasing and contrary contrary to our natural propensities, and so shun them, for a more easy way to peace; but cannot such be met with in a straight place, where neither the devices of the creature, nor the pleasures of the world, can rescue them from the pains of a wounded conscience? When I look at these things, and consider how intricate the path to our real happiness is, it makes me frequently say in my heart, "blessed are the dead that have died in the Lord."

1775. -- "My mind was often with you yesterday, though I could not thereby partake of the valuable company of our dear friends; but I hope many that are more worthy did: for certainly the fociety of those labourers in the great vineyard, must be pleasing and instructive; yet, at times, we feel a mortification in their absence, which, if suffered to have its proper effect, might be a means of exciting us to feek after an inward communion with the fource of all good, the spirit of truth, which is pure and unmixed with human propenfities. But I am afraid that I am speaking more from hearing the experiences of others, than from my own; for I know the language of this internal monitor is not intelligible, without the mind be prepared by the fubjection of its will, and all its powers yield to the Supreme: and this state I am so often deprived of, by the predominance of felf, that it feems hard to fay, whether I ever rightly enjoy this divine privilege."

1777.---- "When we are favoured to feel an internal communion, an intercourse incomprehensible, 'tis indeed attended with rejoicing of heart. A state

state which I can impute to no good cause, frequently accompanies me, in which it would be hard for me to fay, I love my friends; but perhaps it is a constitutional stupidity, which nothing but the immediate operations of truth can divest of; and it is only during the overshadowings thereof, that the useful faculties of my mind are applied to good purposes; for the spring of thy S. T.'s machinery is indeed weak, and daily requires a supernatural aid; but when wisdom utters her voice, when the gentle movings of uncreated purity have gained our ear, what obduracy does it require to refift its energetic language, and lightly efteem the offers of permanent peace! My heart glows with an earnest folicitude, that we, my dear friend, may never faint in our pursuit after celestial treasure, but resignedly furrender our whole affections to the gracious difpofer, and preferver of his people; then, I doubt not, our union will increase, in the increase of purity, and our joy and rejoicing in the fruition of reward, will be of that nature with which the stranger doth not intermeddle."

In the twenty third year of her age, she appeared in the ministry. For this awful service she had been prepared, by the great head of the church, with deep and humbling baptisms of spirit. But as she continued patient and faithful, under this proving dispensation, she experienced divine support, was graciously brought through all, and enabled to stand acceptably for the cause of truth and righteousness on earth.

The close trials and humiliations of her spirit about this time, are, in some degree testified, by the following selections from her letters, to some of her near, sympathizing friends. And though these extracts are of considerable extent, it is hoped their instructive tendency will warrant the insertion of them thus at large.

1778. I don't know but a little love for my friends, and fenfibility of their favours, are the only virtues I possess, and, consequently, all that I can derive any good from: for to my dear friend, to whom my heart hath ever been open, I may confess, that whatever has heretofore felt like life, or been a participation of eternal fubstance, (though always small, and no doubt the food convenient for me) is now entirely extinguished; and the law, the testimony, and the effusions of some little secret devotion, are all as springs shut up, and fountains fealed. Thou art experienced, and tried with many deep baptifms, with wants and with aboundings; but perhaps fuch a state of infensibility to, and defertion of, all that feems good and valuable, was never feen meet for thee; thy refignedness rather bringing thee its rewards, those of true obedience, which have built up and compacted as a Jerusalem, the foundations whereof are fure. But if thou knew the different fituation of my poor toffed mind, it would, I believe, excite a degree of thy fympathy, and fear that the Tempter will wholly overcome: for now, in this time of deep poverty, the world has indeed occupied much room, and what may be called the enjoyments of it, are as clay fettering that part appointed for immortality."-" I often wonder when better times will come; when, in truth, we can adopt the language of the just to their ancient fource: "fpring up, O well, fing ye unto it!" But how can my humiliation be deep enough, when I confess that this fountain appears to be to me, neither ancient nor new?"

1778.——"There is, I believe, an holy intercourse and communion experienced by those whose language is similar and pure, whose feet are established upon the immovable Rock, and whose teacher and strength is the sovereign Lord. This is, I doubt not, one of their rewards; but its sanctity, its refined and exalted nature, seems to exclude me from the participation thereof; for I may confess, the painful experience of my mind is often under such a state of desertion from infinite goodness, that I scarce dare look towards his holy temple, or address him, but in fighs unutterable."

1778.——" Let us travel, unitedly travel forward in the path of humble obedience, which though tribulated, and those that walk in it have often to experience a share of this legacy, " In the world ye shall have trouble," yet the annexed peace, the bread that is handed in secret, and the joy with which a stranger doth not intermeddle, are surely sufficient rewards in this life, and an earnest of that which is to come, that glorious reserve of immortal blis. I feel a greater solicitude than words can describe, that we may, unitedly, be entitled to it, and partake thereof, and that we may feel this certain mark, that we love one another, even with that love which will subsist beyond the grave. But I wonder how arese these sensations, for I daily conclude myself destitute of any that are good; and in the absence of him whom I wish to be to me the chief of ten thousand, I implore the path of obscurity, and, with the mournful prophet, exclaim in my lonesome habitation, the secret of my heart, "Oh that I had in the wilderness a lodging place! but alas! this will not do, this is not the will of him who desires, not to take us out of the world, but to preserve us from the evil that is therein. It is the path of suffering, it is the cross and the shame that we recoil at; and for want of true dedication of heart, many deep and hidden forrows are ours."

1779.——"To inform thee, my dear friend, of the fecret path I have trod of late, is a thing which I know thy good fense, and experience in the mysteries of godlines, will prevent thy requiring. In the facred union, we see the necessity of the leaven being hid, which cements together and brings our nature into a onenes, till the whole lump is fanctissed. Under this apprehension, I have of late been led to endure many new and severe conslicts, without daring to seek consolation, save from that fountain, which issues in the right time, an inexhaustible stream; but to which I am ready to conclude, I am not entitled to approach."

1779.—"I lately thought the bleffing that was craved for us, was abundantly fhed, and our walking feemed, a little, as if it was by the pillar and the cloud; but now, the fun and the moon, even those heavenly bodies which are universally diffused, have, from our eye, withdrawn their light. For my part,

I have feveral times concluded the work is done: and if it be fufficiently, I am glad; but when it feels like the description of meat and drink, there wants, not only patience, but refignation; an attainment which appears to me to be a degree harder than the other. Oh may we walk in the way cast up for us, and may we, now our Moses is withdrawn, be preferved from making a likeness!"-"A fouth land" will, I hope, yield thee "fprings of water:" they require hard digging for here; but the fountain is found to be fo deep when come at, that we need not be afraid of the labour. But I have nothing to boast of, for the refreshing influence of the waters of this fountain, has, I doubt not, been wifely withheld from me; and to have a channel ready for their return, is, what I endeavour, though feebly, to preferve."

1779.—" My mind has been, for fome time, incapable of deriving any fatisfaction, from either the intercourse with, or confolation of a friend. And not having any defire to seek comfort, or have any, but from the fountain of it, silence was not only most consistent with my judgment, but most easy to myself, if I found any thing that could bear that character. Floods of distress have indeed nearly overwhelmed me, and I know not where to turn, or where to look; I abhorred myself, and beheld not the power that could purify. "When I looked for good, then evil came; and for light, behold there was darkness."

1779.——" I went to meeting yesterday morning, with, I thought, some degree of devotedness, and for fome time fat in darkness; but after a deep labour of mind, there felt fomething to gather about me; and with it came my deep rooted dislike to the work; which so strove with the other, that for a time, enduring a flate of agony, the meeting broke up. On going in the afternoon, I concluded myself given up, and little expected to feel any thing again at that time: but after fitting a while, the matter again returned, and would, I believe, have terminated the fame way, had not a friend stood up with the passage, "He that knew his Lord's will and prepared not himfelf, neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes." This did indeed come home, and so operated with what was already kindled, that after fuch a conflict as I have cause ever to remember, I ventured upon my knees, and, in a manner I believe fcarcely intelligible, poured out a few petitions. Now I feel in fuch a state of humiliation and fear, as I never before experienced; and my ftrength, both natural and spiritual, so low, that the floods are ready to come upon me again."

1780.——" I often keep filence, and find myfelf a subject copious enough for meditation, which is not always of the pleasing kind; but I endeavour to pass along as quietly as I can; it being seldom my lot to experience much sympathy or fellowship with my friends, and, consequently, I cannot expect to derive much from theirs. And yet for all this, I do not mean to complain, but am abundantly convinced, that I lived upon this pleasant fruit, this sensible union, long enough; and to know the want of it, is, I doubt not, sometimes as necessary necessary as its free circulation, which may perhaps return in its season, when it may prove like the dew of Hermon."

fions of my alliance to a state of properly attained peace, arise more from thy good wishes to me, as an individual, and from that univerfal love, which is imprest with a sense of the benevolent extendings of divine regard, that defires all may partake as at the river of life freely, than from a just sense of the real fituation of my mind; which has not yet cast its fackcloth covering, nor received a garment of praife. And as this change cannot be effected, but by the miraculous power of the divine arm, I wish only to feek for it from this fource of strength; and if it be my lot to go foftly all the days of my life, in the bitterness of my foul, I wish to submit to this allotment, and endure the necessary turnings of the divine hand: but Oh! that I had in the wilderness a lodging place, that no eye might see, nor ear hear, the imperfect state of a heart, the depths of whose distress, omnipotence only can fathom."

1780.—"When thy letter, before this last reached me, it was my full intention to have replied to it very soon; but in this, as in the most important and necessary pursuits the human mind can have, the spirit of procrastination prevailed; which I generally find is the case, when the first ability the mind possesses to do good, is not accepted. This is a restection I have often painfully to make, because its subject never fails to impart a feeling

when

fense of weakness; and when we consider it properly, that our being here is uncertain, and that the time, wherein we can acquire durable riches, is, though fufficient for the work defigned us, short and fleeting, we can scarce quench an impulse to vigilance, or view ourselves in any other light, than sojourners in a land of exile, where the spirit that is pure, and the light which is the life of men, is oppressed and rejected, because to the natural eye, it hath neither form nor comeliness. I may, to my dear friend, confess, that my travel hath long been through a waste howling wilderness, where, (though furrounded with innumerable bleffings) my mind hath been led mostly to feel itself like a pelican, and to wish for an outward situation similarly obscure, that I might for ever be hid from the eyes of men, of whom I often feel a fear that baffles description; but as this allotment has not fallen out for me, there feems no way, but fimply to attend to that impulse which I have apprehended to be divine, and at the fame time am thoroughly willing to be convinced, is not. Thy wish, that faith may be equal to the trials of my day, was peculiarly applicable; for could I give thee an idea, how often I am ready to fink in the depths of distress, when the weeds are indeed wrapped about my head, and all fupports are either refused or withdrawn, thou would readily conclude me short of faith and patience too. But no language is able to fet forth that fituation of mind, when the wisdom which is from above, and that which is from beneath are struggling for victory. It is truly a fiery trial, but one which I fear will never in me confume all the reprobate filver. I have stumbled on a subject, which I had no thoughts of even hinting at, when I began; but in confidence and freedom I have often been led to open my mind to thee, and I trust That, wherein we were heretofore united, will not fail to strengthen our bond, and open to us a channel of converse, more hidden and pure than we have yet altogether experienced; and a fellowship which is only understood, when the mysteries of the true church are opened. Tell me, my beloved friend! art thou passing through this wilderness, and often ready to faint for want of water? If fo, allow me to fay, prolong not thy journey there, through a fearfulness of taking thy possessions in the promised land, nor of the inhabitants which are to be fubdued before it can be enjoyed; for I trust no transient, fading joy, can yield thy mind that peace it defires: wherefore let not thy hands hang down, but rather put on strength, in the name of him who is able to help, and in whom is the fulness of power, and be strong and work; for I believe it is a day, in which this command is gone forth to those whose hands are not polluted, and whose language is not that of confusion. Deep are the baptisms of such, or how could they be fitted to ftand in that day of trial which is, with a gradual and fleady pace, approaching, if not rooted and established upon that Rock, against which the gates of hell can never prevail. And though these, for the present, have to drink of that cup of adversity, whereof our holy pattern first tasted, and have to be baptized with the baptisin he was baptized with, yet, in the immediate revival of his promifes, from that comforter which he has fent, there remains to be confolation."

In the 4th month 1780, with the approbation of the monthly meeting, and in company with her mother, she was engaged in a religious visit to friends in the counties of Westmoreland and Cumberland.

The following extracts contain the material parts of what are collected, from her own account of her concern in this visit.

-"The meeting at Bowes was trying, though I believe fatisfactory to my mother. For my part, I had deep heart-felt mortification, (which I have been very little free from fince) and went very much fatigued to bed, it being ten at night when the meeting broke up, and we had a hard day's work in travelling. Next morning, we fat a little with a schoolmafter and his wife, to whom there was much openness to communicate close counsel, as well as encouragement. Next day we went to Penrith, where we staid over First-day, and had two suffering meetings; in both which I felt a greater unwillingness to fubmit to a necessary wading of spirit, than I can describe; for really, the spring of life requires such digging for, in places where the substance of religion is departed from, and only the image retained, that, in this exercife, I frequently felt ready to faint, and always engage with it in great dread; because it oppofes that natural part, which would keep the house in peace, and be free from all these troubles. However, I felt more ease of mind in the evening than I could have expected, having drank tea at the house of a widow friend, and had an open, favoured opportunity amongst her daughters, seve-

-" Longtown * was, as I expected, a place of fome fuffering to me; but I could not have expected to have felt myfelf fuch a speckled bird as I did, though I kept myfelf much to myfelf: but it was impossible to keep as retired as was defirable. nor were my motives for it justifiable, being only to shun the appearance of a fool, amongst a set of wise and fine folks, whom we had at our inn. Indeed, a state of deep heart-felt mortification has been my lot, mostly, fince I saw you; but as the cause, without doubt, originates in the impurity of my own mind, I ought to be thankful for dispensations fo necessary, though hard to bear; for surely there never was any, to whom the simplicity of truth was fo irksome, and who caused themselves such deep and hidden conflicts as myfelf. When one is got over, and another approaches, that disposition, which loves not forrow, but would walk eafily

^{*} The northern yearly meeting was then hald there-

through life, is ready, in the remembrance of what it has fuffered, to fay, like the king appointed for destruction, I thought the bitterness of death was past; but Oh! how many strokes do I need to accomplish this death! It has been hard for me to have my mind bent under any degree of that weight and fuffering, which are generally necessary to feel, before the spring is found to be opened, or any circulation of divine life experienced: because flesh and blood cannot aid in this labour, and, its ftrength being fet at nought, it wars with the spirit: in the feeling whereof, I am often ready to faint. Oh! that my feet may stand fast in the bottom of Jordan; that I may neither flinch from a necessary wading of spirit, nor be overpowered with the floods of the mighty deep; and, above all, that I may be preferved from uttering words without life, for truly, " I am a child !"

When I wrote you last, my mind was indeed in a sad spot; the billows seemed to go over my head, and life felt almost to be a burden; for I could not at that time, look at our going to Whitehaven without the view of visiting the families, and that work appeared so ungrateful to me, that I could not bear the thoughts of having any thing to do in it. However, I endeavoured to forget it, and to consider that if the thing was right, it would be got through, and that somebody, better able and better skilled than myself, would have the burden to bear, and the work to do; and that if I got mortified with having something to do, now and then, the visit might be of as much benefit to me as to the whole meeting besides. Thus I endeavoured to rest it, when my mind would fubmit to think coolly on the fubject; and indeed I had almost lost the painful impression when we got to Whitehaven, till we both felt it in the forenoon meeting on 1st day, with this conclusion, that to yield was the only way to leave the place in peace. My mother having previous to her view of this vifit, concluded to have a meeting at Maryport on 3d day, found herfelf most easy to pursue that plan, and acordingly we went on 2d day afternoon. We found that the right time was fixed on for Maryport, and a favoured meeting it was, there being much openness to labour, indeed far more than in fome places where a greater appearance is retained; but where, it is forrowfully to be felt, the mighty are fallen, and tribes are lacking amongst them. There are many fuch places in this county, as well as in ours; and under a fense thereof, we have known a going bowed down all the day long. After this meeting, we returned to, and proceeded in, the work at Whitehaven. The labours in this vifit were of the mortifying kind, and required a continual exercise of both faith and patience: because we had generally to fit where the people fat, which was often in difmal places; but being, I trust, in the right line, it will be made more profitable than could then be feen. It got finished on 6th day, and in the evening there was a meeting appointed to begin at 5 o'clock; which was, like all the vifit before, a fuffering meeting; but I hope the rightly concerned in that place, will reap the benefit of it, for it was, though painful, a remarkable time. It is with a degree of thankfulness I may acknowledge, that I felt in this visit, a greater resignation to what I apprehended prehended was the divine will, than I ever experienced before; and I can, now it is over, cheerfully fubmit to the belief, that I was of no use, (if even preferved from doing harm) but that the thing was made useful to me, in subjecting my own mind, and teaching me, by a little more experience, the true way to wisdom, which is first becoming a fool. This state of preparation I expect to be in, all my life long; but I wish, (with a fear) that it may be fo abode in, as to obtain the prize at last. Well, this trial is over, with being refused, reviled, and fought with as by beafts at Ephefus; yet thefe are fmall troubles indeed, when compared with the enemies of our own houses, that host of opposition which is often hard to press through. This wo is past, and I pray in my heart that another of the fame kind may not foon come; for though I was favoured to feel it made much easier to me than I could have expected, yet the work of vifiting families has always, fince I was led feriously to consider it, appeared to be fo awful, and to require the royal fignet to be so evidently affixed, that the fear is great, of either moving without it, or being concerned in fo momentous a work, when there is not strength enough to support, and wisdom to teach."

On their way home, they felt a concern to visit the families of friends at Kendal; near the conclusion of which, she says, "The spirits and body seem both ready to fail under the present exercise; but we have no reason to repent engaging with it; for, thus far, we have experienced strength sufficient for the day." Soon after her return from this journey, she writes concerning it as follows: "After many close exercises and deep trials, mine chiefly of my own making, we are now enjoying a good degree of peaceful ferenity, and though (I think) fufficiently stripped, yet we seem pretty clear of any painful reslections on the past allotment.

Towards the latter end of the year 1780, she came under a religious concern to join her friend and relative T. Hoyland, in a visit to the meetings of Cheshire, and a part of those in Lancashire. And having the concurrence of the monthly meeting, and a certificate thereof, she set forward to engage in this service, in the 12th month. The ensuing parts of her letters on the subject, afford some account of this journey, and shew the situation of her mind, under the prospect of the work before her, and in the prosecution and completion thereof.

"Cheshire has long attracted my mind, and of late more than usual; and on my cousin T. H. laying a similar concern before me, those feelings revived with some weight; and not without a great fear lest, (though the impulse might be right) the time and companion might not be in the same appointment: and hence appeared the necessity of having it hewed and squared.

"It is only in a little faith that I look towards the journey in prospect, and at the rectitude of it; and though I sear it is not equal to a grain of mustard seed, yet I think I am thankful for this little: and since it has been received, and the affair mentioned, a degree of peacefulness and quietude hath attended my mind, which is all the light I find upon it; and which requires sometimes, all my vigilance gilance to retain, left the floods from the mouth of the dragon should overwhelm, and cast away that little strength that is at present afforded; and instead of adding thereto by devotedness, to be any thing or nothing, leave me tossed upon the unstable element, where neither rock nor shore can sometimes be perceived."

- It was not indeed the least of my concern, or rather dislike, to submit to the thoughts of going to fome places in Lancashire, which I had in view; for, indeed, that feemed not much less than giving up my life; and this proceeded from confiderations which I think thou canst hardly share, having furmounted many of the difficulties and mortifications which appear very formidable to me. But when we have fuffered for disobedience, and are favoured with a view of the rewards of the faithful, and are likewise convinced of the importance of our duties, though ever fo small in appearance; when our nothingness is sufficiently felt, and our minds impressed with the awfulness of the divine requirings; life itself looks but a fmall facrifice, and fo reasonable, that there is no excuse for withholding it, especially that inward existence which does not co-work with the life of true religion."

[&]quot;From Ackworth, I had a companion who imparted fome good and wholefome counfel to me, and more encouragement, than I could have looked for; but my fecret fitting was in the dust and much gloom feemed to cover my little views. I reflected on the preceding evening, and found its enjoyment was then like manna two days old, having lost both favour and nourishment; and instead of a renewal of the same, a fast was dispensed, the cause of which I must leave; but it is a painful one, and if I had felt myfelf before I left home, as I have done fince, it is much if the venture had been made. Could I believe that this is any thing like going forth without either scrip or purse, I should perhaps be more reconciled. I am thankful that, in every state I have some degree of the comfortable impresfion, that unity is good; and though mine is not of the most expansive kind, yet in a renewed feeling of my little, I cannot but wish, that we may be so willing to fuffer together, and frequently to go down to the potter's house, to be there fashioned and formed either for veffels of honour or dishonour, (as may best please him who hath power over the clay) that we may also experience an humble ascent to the house of true prayer, and a rejoicing together. My heart is too full for words to relieve, but being convinced that there is a better and more refined intercourse than this, a communion which, proportioned to our obedience, is pure and edifying, I wish in that to remember, and be remembered."

found there but one family of friends, who came in by convincement. It was a comfortable place; for their fimplicity and integrity rendered their cottage an agreeable mansion, in which there was nothing painful to be felt. The meeting there next day, was much larger than we looked for, many people in the neighbourhood coming in, whose folid, innocent countenances, were, I thought, as likely to do us good, as we to do them any. It was a fatisfactory meeting, and afforded fome encouragement to proceed. We went to Stockport on 7th day afternoon; the meeting on first day was a painful, trying one, and yet strength was not withheld. From Macclesfield we came to Leek, and have just finished (except one family) a visit to the families here. We have had eight fittings to-day, besides the week-day meeting, which has been close work. We are however (and have cause to be) thankful, that strength equal to the undertaking has been afforded; and though we have been deeply tried, yet, upon the whole, I believe we may acknowledge, that we have lacked nothing, and have been much united to a few in this place. This work of visiting families, is the last I should choose for myfelf, if I might be my own chooser; but as it is wrong to defire that indulgence, I fee I may as well give myfelf up to what appears in the line of duty. -It is with thankfulness of heart, that I acknowledge myself in a tolerable degree of health, through many different dispensations which have fallen to my lot fince I faw you; for there have been experienced a wanting, and a fufficient abounding; but I wish I could add, that in every state I have learned to be content. Great indeed hath been the condescension of him who is pleased to make use of poor, weak instruments, and by things which not only appear low and contemptible, but are fo in reality, to bring to nought, and reduce things that are mountains in prospect; proving to us a present help in every needful time, and, by his invisible power, ftrengthening us when we are ready to faint in our minds. And still greater, I may acknowledge, hath appeared his wisdom in deeply trying us, or however myfelf, with the most abject poverty and strippedness of mind; indeed so much so, that I think I never before experienced fuch humility, in a fense of myself, and, under the convincing proof, that of ourselves we can do nothing. This is a fituation wherein we fee whence all good comes, and the necessity of casting ourselves so wholly upon the divine arm, as to have no confidence in the flesh. No dispensation, however desirable the enjoyment of good may be, feems fo much to drive us to the root of life, if we endeavour fufficiently to profit by it; and confequently, none that we ought to be fo thankful for, when our hearts are capable of feeling true gratitude; for he who knows the weakness of our frames, and is touched with a feeling of our infirmities, fees what we can bear, and knows how frail we are. Thus have I, in this little journey. been wifely taught, through many trials, to live by faith; and thus far, in reflecting on the past, to own I have lacked nothing. But we are abundantly convinced, that they who are fent out in this day, to a people who have, in a great measure, forfaken both law and testimony, and what is still worse, see not their states, but are secure in themselves, have not to eat much pleafant bread: for I think I may fay, it hath often been our lots to go bowed down all the day long, and to mourn in a deep fense of the great defolation which overspreads the fociety: infomuch, that we often admire that there should be any fent out to visit them, and that the feet of those that are rightly shod, should not more generally be turned to others: for from these, there are the greatest hopes in this county, which is likely, in many places, to be left defolate of friends who keep their places. We have, however, in a few of the meetings which we have last attended, been agreeably disappointed, in finding more preserved or quickened by the life of religion, than we expected; and it hath been our lot to visit these, as well as a very contrary fort, by families. A very trying work it hath been, and it is not yet done. In it I have often lamented, lest for want of that spirit of discerning, with which the prophet was endued, when he went to anoint one of the fons of Jesse, there should not be a right division of the word, and thereby much harm be done. And under this confideration, great abasedness hath attended my mind, and a defire that the fleece may be tried both wet and dry. We left Namptwich undone, and hoped, nay even refolved, to return to it no more; but now I have to confess, we are on our way thither. It is however a favour, that, through all, we are led to feel and fympathize one with another; I mean my companion and felf, and that our little fervices have been harmonious; and if we keep near that preferving arm which hath been with us, I doubt not but this strength will continue and increase; for in unity, if it be of the right kind, there is certainly strength."-"We got to Manchester, after a week of many probations, which ended better than we could have looked for, at the beginning of it, when our hearts were ready to faint, and the billows feemed to run over our heads, in the feeling of what we had already fuffered, in remembering the affliction and diffress, the wormwood and the gall. Our minds were humbled in the prospect of an opening field; but I trust it was He who commanded the waves to be still, that calmed these sloods, and renewed a degree of faith and patience to persevere in the tribulated way. What need there is to keep near to the fountain of life, and to receive our refreshment folely from it! because from thence only, arise our fresh springs, and immortal food; which, though the bread of adversity and the water of affliction, yet coming from this fource, it is no less efficacious to the nourishing, strengthening, and building us up, than the fenfible union with divine purity. Our hearts are very incapable of judging, concerning the virtue of the dispensations of providence; we know not ourselves, and consequently, cannot prescribe for ourselves. How passive then, and how like little children, should we be to him that fearcheth the heart? but I am often afraid, lest, by indulging my own ideas of what is good, and not labouring after a total refignation of mind, but wanting to have things in my own way, I should frustrate the divine intention, which may be to humble and reduce felf, more than flesh and blood would point out. The great meetings we meet with, are almost overmuch for us, and what made it still worse to us at Liverpool, was a funeral in the afternoon, and a vast number of people. We little thought when we fixed to flay over 2d day at Manchester, that we should have one to attend there, which is the cafe this afternoon, and how it will be got over, I know not. If we may but be favoured to be rightly quiet, it is all we defire; and if we cannot be that, it is certainly our best way, as far as we are able, to take up the crofs,

the

and

and defpife the shame; which sometimes feels great, and at others, I may thankfully acknowledge, is in a great measure removed; but then, what need there is of care not to overrun the guide, and work without the power of the word? Dangers surround us on every hand, and our standing often seems as on a sea of glass."

"With fatisfaction and pleasure, I have lately looked towards home; indeed with fo much, that a fear fometimes strikes me, lest in wisdom some unforeseen affliction should be sent to moderate it. According to my present feelings, I am returning peaceful and easy; and though we have missed some meetings, which I own I had a view of, yet it was with a full belief, that they will not be laid to my charge. I wish that we may be thankful enough for the favours we have received divers ways, fince we left home; and, what appears to me no fmall one, for the readiness of my beloved connexions, in making every thing as easy as outward means can poslibly do, and affording accommodations, for want of which many lie under very great difficulties. The confideration of these things often affects my mind."

Bradford, 19th of 1st month 1781.

"I thought, when we left Manchester, that it was a strange thing if we did not return to it again; yet I had since lost the impression, surther than wondering why such a thought should then have struck me; and even the concern about many meetings, which I thought we had missed, was so much gone off my mind, (where it had dwelt with fome weight) that I feemed perfectly eafy, under the belief that the concern would devolve on my companion, but little expected it was fo foon to be evinced: for after much fecret forrow, which I perceived, but durst not pronounce my apprehensions of the cause, she disclosed last night her uneafiness, and defire to return to the places we passed by, as well as to go to some others in this county. On looking a little ferioufly at it, (indeed not a little, for we had nearly a fleepless night) I could not see that it was less than my duty to return with her; not only from having had a view of the fame places, but as a companion, which, if truly one, cannot leave in the day of trouble. I wish myself better qualified to sympathize with her in this trial, which is a very great one, and requires all the alleviations that are in my power to bestow. I believe her willingness is now fo great, that, for the purchase of a little peace, she would return to all the places, to do the things which appeared needful, and were not fully joined in with; but when this great facrifice of the will is completely made, I trust some ram will be caught in the thicket, or fome smaller offering accepted. Home now looks at a great distance, and I find that it will contribute most to my peace, to think as little of it as I well can; and if it had been less in my mind of late, this turn in our affairs, would by me, have been lefs felt. We find ourselves after the meeting to-day, in a very gloomy fituation of mind; as it was a fuffering time, and we thought left us with the fentence of death in ourselves; perhaps that we may not trust in ourfelves, which I ardently wish we may be preserved

from.

from. We intend going to Leeds to-morrow evening; we dread it not a little, and this day's work increases the apprehension of very great suffering; but it often seems best to leave, or draw the mind from suture trials, and endeavour, as well as we can, to bear those of the present day, which are generally found to be sufficient."

Manchester, 4th of 2d month 1781.

--" Our minds are often bowed down, under a sense of the awfulness of our engagements, and difmayed at the fight; nor need I fay how closely our time is filled up therewith; for after fitting with feven or eight families, we are generally ready for rest. I have the very great satisfaction now to fay, that, except one family, we have finished in this place; have had four to-day, besides the two meetings, and upwards of forty fince we began, with putting now and then two together. We were at Stockport on 4th day, and had it unexpectedly in our power, to pay off a small debt which we contracted when there before. It has been wonderful to us, how we have been, and are likely to be, turned to places, and thrown in the way of doing our first works; which we cannot but view, as a mark of divine condescension to our infant state: Indeed it hath been manifested to us far beyond what we could have looked for. in the course of this journey throughout; and not less fo since we came into this place, where instruction hath been daily administered from different fources; fome of which have proved deeply trying to flesh and blood; but being, I trust, in the ordering of unerring wisdom, I wish (perhaps more than I endeavour) to profit patiently thereby, and value the rod as well as the staff. It is indeed high time to number our blessings. They are truly many, and we cannot fail of seeing and seeling them; that of having the parental care and solicitude of several of our much honoured and valued friends, is not small in our estimation."

-" We have now got to Warrington, and are endeavouring to keep ourselves quiet, and, as much as we can, labour to feel what is the divine will concerning us; which, with respect to our coming here, hath been much a mystery. The prospect almost dismays us, attended with a fear, that we may now be in danger of compassing a mountain in the wilderness, and engage in a service, for which our strength is not proportioned; and fo, notwithstanding we have been favoured with divine condescension to our states heretofore, bring upon ourselves unnecessary trials, and thereby pierce our minds, in future, with many forrows. It is no fmall concern to us to find, with the present view of things, every qualification wanting for fuch a fervice; and our minds greatly stripped of strength and clear discerning: and to move without a renewal of these, we dare not. When my companion first proposed our return, the evidence I thought was fo ftrong, that I cheerfully complied: yet feelings very unlike these ensued, even a state of deep distress and mortification, when I found we must turn our backs on home, and return from whence we came, to do our first works. Great was our pain, from, I believe, an unfubjected will; but great likewise and evident, was the operation of the divine hand, in judgment upon us for the past, and, no doubt, as a preparation for the future; for it never appeared clearer to me, than when under this dispensation, that for every fresh service and work in the church, we must experience a renewed baptism of spirit, and purification of the gift; and that the more we have of the drofs, or the reprobate filver, the more frequently must we pass through the refining fire. Notwithstanding I was sometimes, in the impatience of my heart, ready to query as the children of Ifrael did, "were there not graves enough in Egypt, that we are brought hither to die;" yet there were times, when all that was within me. was proftrated under the chaftifing hand, and fought that it might not spare. How preferable is it to all fecondary administrations of judgment, when, with David, we wish rather to fall into the Lord's hands, than into the hands of man! and furely, the more we feek to derive our instruction and food from the fountain of good, the lefs we shall be subject to instrumental means."

"I never felt myself under such complicated discouragements at any time; and Oh! that we may both be enabled to bear these fiery trials, with resignation to the divine will, and seek to prosit by them, that the state of a weaned child may become our experience."

As I make no doubt it will be acceptable to thee to hear from two poor pilgrims, who are almost worn out with things that appear too mighty for them, I just embrace a little vacant time, to hint how we have fared; and may in the first place fay, that the prefent engagement hath been the most trying of the kind we ever experienced. It hath been frequently our lot, to go down as to the bottom of the mountains, where the earth with her bars, was about us; under this pressure, our minds have been fecretly clad with fackcloth and deep mourning, when it has evidently appeared, that the pure life of religion is in a state of bondage, and that it fensibly utters the language, "I am oppressed under you, as a cart with sheaves." To vifit this feed of the kingdom, we find to be no light matter, especially when hid under the briers and thorns, and then plumed with human wisdom; who indeed is sufficient for these things? I often lament, and with reason, that my heart is not more bound to the cause, and more willing to fuffer for it; and I fully believe, that until this is more experienced, there will remain to be, as there have already been, many trials and afflictions, which originate not in the divine will; for it is still a truth, that our greatest enemies are those of our own houses, and that to endeavour to subdue these, is our indifpenfable duty: but oh! what strokes are in wisdom administered to us, to destroy that life which hath no existence in the divine purity; and except we be faithful unto this death, we can with no probability look for the crown immortal. We have frequently had to recur to the moving cause of this journey, and, as an additional trial, found the feeling fense of that withdrawn from us; but all these things teach us where to place our present dependance; and notwithstanding dispensations thus painful have been our portion, we have great cause, thankfully to commemorate the bleffings of the divine and bountiful hand, which hath been strength in our weakness, riches in our poverty, and a present helper in the needful time; and hath refreshed our drooping spirits, insomuch that, with alacrity of heart, we have pursued the path cast up for us, and have been savoured to see the great necessity of passing frequently through the furnace; and oh! saith my heart, that I may be willing to descend again and again, till He whose invincible arm sustaineth us there, is pleased to say, "It is enough."

"We have now finished, for what we know, our engagement at Warrington. We wound up all in this family last evening; but oh what a day was yesterday! my companion's situation and mine were very different, though both trying; and the more fo, because we were not alike led; but still there is a fecret trust, that we were both in our places. The meeting was held at Penketh, and being the preparative meeting, was very large. The first meeting was so low and painful in the forepart, that I was glad fecretly to offer myfelf to do any thing, if light might but shine upon my dwelling. In this fituation, I foon faw that we had nothing to do in that fitting; but it feemed as if I heard a voice, "visit the men and women when feparated, for they require different food." The evidence was, I thought, fo strong, that I earnestly defired to be preferved faithful, however hard it might be to the creature, lest a worse state should befal me. When the meetings parted, I just requested my companion to feel if it might not be best to go into the men's meeting: her reply was, " fhe had feen nothing of it, but would go with me." This greatly increased the burden that was upon my mind, but remembering my recent view and request, I durst not, after all the favours I had received at the divine hand, in our late probationary visit, refuse a compliance with this intimation of duty; and finding I had a little strength, was made willing, with that, to become still more a spectacle to angels and to men, than before in this place.—I believe I had my companion's fympathy, but she said she had nothing to do; which I own, fo discouraged me, with the painful apprehension that I had been out of my place, led by an unfanctified zeal, or, at least, had so imprudently administered the right thing, that I had already done more harm than good; fo that, though there was a covering of good over the women's meeting, and a little ability to relieve my own mind at least, I fo loft faith, and gave way fo much, to thinking myfelf quite fpent and exhausted, that I managed to bring my load away with me; which, added to the mortifying remembrance of what I had done, nearly funk me for a time into the deepest diftress. But by endeavouring to keep it to myself, (my greatest discouragements however) and to recur to what I apprehended, was the moving cause of my doing and leaving undone, there enfued a little quietness, and a small, but comfortable evidence, that the offering of obedience, as far as. it had been made, was acceptable; and that what was omitted, was viewed with divine, compassionate regard to the weakness, and not wilfulness, of my poor depressed mind. And notwithstanding we had three fittings afterwards, and my body almost as ill as I thought it could be, to bear up, yet there felt to me full as much strength and life, as I have found before in this place; and this morning I feel so refreshed with the foregoing, and a good night's rest, that I don't know that I have a complaint of any fort; only I could wish for a little more clearness respecting some approaching days. Thus I comfortably and thankfully experience, that though forrow has come for a long night in this place, joy springs in the morning. When the fun of righteousness, in any degree, arises, and the mind feels its refreshing influence, how does it encourage to press forward, and to think nothing too hard to submit to, for this excellent appearance! but how ready, like the disciples, are we to folicit that our tabernacles may be built here, and we not descend into the lower parts of the earth again, there to be covered with its bars, and feel ourselves as at the bottom of the mountains; though it is from thence, we are led to look for a better habitation, and to labour that the pure life may arife, and we be favoured to dwell with it, though feldom in a state of dominion, remembering for our instruction, that Aaron the great high priest, was permitted to enter into the holy of holies but once a year, for his common fervice was in the tabernacle.—I cannot but look upon this morning, which feels pleafanter than many, to be perhaps the opening of another tribulating day; for it does not appear a time for fuch as are, in the finallest degree, able to be baptized into the present state of the church, to eat much pleafant bread: but I wish I was more preserved from from those infirmities of darkening counsel, &c. in times of proving, when a gulf feems to open for present destruction. Oh what a trial, or trials of this fort have we had in this place! but I wish to forget these toils, and rather seek for greater wisdom to bear the future. It is marvellous to me, how things are brought about, that we have had views of, but no probability of being effected; and particularly with respect to this monthly meeting, which I thought I faw, before we fet off from home, and often wondered when we were leaving Lancashire, how such things could be? and fometimes, on that account, was ready to call all in question; finding many such causes of discouragement, which now seem gradually removing."

Liverpool, 20th of 2d month, 1781.

-" The fellowship and tenderness of our friends was never more defirable, than in these days of deep probation and instruction. Wonders are indeed yet manifested in the deeps, where, finding the demonstration of the spirit and power, even my strong heart has, to my own admiration, been made willing to receive the bitterest of cups; and all that is within me, has bowed and done obeifance to him, before whom I have had daily and piercingly to abhor myfelf; under renewed, powerful, evidences, that without the frequent administration of the Holy Ghost and fire, and repeatedly descending to the washing pool, there is no offering an acceptable facrifice; and that this must be a dispensation for life, if ever any offering is found to be without blemish, which I fear it never will; but if preserved with spiritual fight, and a necessary jealousy over myself, I shall, I trust. fo far deem myself bleffed .- How are such as move in this line to be pitied! their standing cannot be better described, than as being on a sea of glass, mingled with fire. But I would not fay any thing to discourage, nor would I wish to be like the evil spies; therefore may add, that from what I have feen of the good land, attainable at times in this work, it is well worth our pressing after, and its fruit is fo pleafant, that it amply refreshes the weary traveller. I could, yesterday morning, set my feal to the truth of this; but alas! the scene. fince then, has changed much. We were at the monthly meeting at Hartshaw to-day, for which we have both cause to be thankful; not because the food was pleafant, but because it was, we trust, wholesome; and this evening we are come to this place, to which we fet off in the bitterness of our spirits. It looks indeed often to my mind, as if a fingular visitation is renewedly extended to our fociety; but there is a painful fear, that the day will pass over the heads of many: yet, with it, a hope springs, that there are others who will be purified, tried, and made white."

York, 3d of 3d month 1781.

me, more and more, to have been in the orderings of divine wisdom; and such as have more evidently arisen from our unwillingness to submit to the humbling power of the cross, will surely be profitably remembered by us, and gradually work that patience and pure resignation of heart, which can enable us, in holy confidence, to rejoice, and count it all joy, when we fall into divers temptations and tribulations, for the trial and refinement of our faith in him, who was made perfect through fuffering. My mind, has, in general, fince my return home, felt a state of deep prostration, and humble gratitude to that all-ruling power, which hath, I fully believe, helped us in our late engagements, and would more eminently have done it, if our minds had borne a greater fimilarity to the passive clay. Great instruction arises in the commemoration of these things. To feel our minds centred in a quiet fubmission to the present allotment, now we are returned, and a willingness either to do or fuffer, appears the most desirable state for us, and is what I hope thou largely experiencest."

In the twelfth month 1781, with the approbation of the monthly meeting, she was concerned in a religious vifit, to a part of the families within the monthly meeting of Owftwick and Cave. Although her steppings along in this fervice, were attended with close trials, yet she was enabled to perform it with a degree of peace and fatisfaction; which appears from her own expreffions on this occasion: "We have got along as well as we could have looked for, confidering the prevailing declenfion and weakness of the present day; which in these, as well as in many other places, widely spread themselves. Deep fuffering, and a painful exercise of mind, are often our lot; but being, I trust, in a good degree refigned thereto, they are, at times fucceeded with with a calm, and a little evidence, that the fervant is not wholly difunited from the mafter."

She was engaged, in the 1st month 1782, in a visit to some families, which had not been visited by the friends who had lately been concerned in a family-visit in that quarter. At the conclusion of this visit, she remarks as follows, "It was, I think, the most trying service of the kind that I ever had any sense of; the general unseelingness and impenetrableness of the visited, rendered the labour almost without hope. So greatly departed are many amongst us, from the virtue of heavenly dew, that it is now deemed an unnecessary attainment."

CHAP.

C H A P. II.

Her marriage—and fourney into Scotland, Cimberland, &c.

In the 4th month 1782, she was married to our friend Robert Grubb, of Clonmel in Ireland, who had for some time resided at York; to whom she was a faithful and tender companion, and a sympathizing, strengthening helpmeet, in the various probations of their spiritual pilgrimage. On this subject, the following instructive letter, written some months afterwards, appears to be worthy of insertion.

"It was an awful thing to me, to enter into this new fphere. I am now bleffed with all, and more than I had any right to ask for in it. I wish to number these bleffings, and approve myfelf worthy of them. This belief ever accompanies my mind, that if we wrest not ourselves out of the divine hand, whose fatherly care and protection is over us, our cup of life will be so blended, as to prevent our sitting down in outward enjoyments. Few and sleeting are the days of our pilgrimage; and every additional experience consirms the sentiment, that our solid satisfaction depends not on our possessing all that the unmortisfied part in us can desire; for there still remains, in the immortal part, a void, which immortal substance only, can satisfy. To have this supplied with wholesome food, and every other gratification to stand subordinate thereto, is the present secret breathing of my spirit: that so the blessing of preservation may attend us, and patience have its perfect work, till the burning of the Lord's day hath done its office, and a quiet centre in everlasting repose, is obtained."

About two weeks after this event, she entered on a religious visit to friends in Scotland, in company with her friend Mary Proud; having previously obtained a certificate of concurrence from the monthly meeting. This concern had, for many months, dwelt frequently on her mind, and had now matured fo, that she thought it her duty to engage in it, at this time. Her feelings under the view of it, and in the prospect of her marriage, with her refignation to the fervice, and defires for divine prefervation and direction; are, in fome measure, set forth, by the following extracts from fome of her letters, written on those occafions.-" I cannot be on the verge of fuch important, and some new, concerns, without feeling deep anxiety, and many fears; my mind is often fo deeply oppressed with my present load, that I feel continually bowed down under it, and not very fit for this employ. The mind and body feldom fuffer alone, and it is comfortable to believe, that they are not intended to be always, or long companions. I have not been very well of late, which is not to be wondered at, nor is it worth much attention."

-- " The fentiment thou drops respecting Scotland, is fo exactly fimilar to my own, that it was like a little strength handed in the time of need; and I greatly wish, if the thing be proved to be right, to be enabled to make a facrifice of every felfish inclination; that my offerings and prayers, in this one step, may be pure and acceptable to Him who fees in fecret. But I often feelingly remember a faying of M. Peisley's, that she was "torn as between heaven and earth;" and it many times is matter of doubt, in which I shall centre. I have as much nature as most, and as great an aptness to cover myself with it, and live upon it; and though to be thus drawn from fuch a fource, is cause of thankfulness, yet it seems like the pangs of death, and I fometimes query, whether my natural body will not fall under the operation. Was it not for, now and then, experiencing my firength a little renewed, and my mind clothed with the quietness of that habitation, which the arrows of the archers cannot penetrate, I must fall to the opposition of the enemy in myfelf; but when the arm of power is felt to be near, then it is, that we rejoice in the means of our falvation."

There is still a secret belief, that the growth and cultivation of my views respecting a northern journey, were, by that hand, from which I have apprehended my most important engagements have proceeded; and though it has, for many months, dwelt frequently upon my mind, yet I cherished a belief, that it was very far off; till the prospect of settling in a new line of life

drew nearer, and then, this distant view as fast approached. It was afresh revived when I wrote to thee last; but I wished to try it still a little longer, if, in the kindness of Him, who knows my great unfitness for an engagement so important, my refignation to it might be an acceptable facrifice. Instead of this, the weight increased, and I found, on complying with fome early proceedings in another affair, that my peace materially depended, on having thee informed of what I had in view; that thereby this concern might keep pace with the other, and I attend to what may appear to be my own business, no further, than resignation to a superior service was experienced. My dear friend knows the necessity of an entire furrender of ourselves, to what appears, in the pointings of duty, to be our proper business, and of keeping our eye as fteadily to that as we can; that fo, by its fingleness, we may have light sufficient for the work of our day. And as, without this quiet attention, we are often led into doubts, fears, and many reasonings, so we are frequently found to require provings of mind, strippings, and many baptisms, in order to fit us for the state, in which alone there is fafety; a truly humble, dependant state, reduced of ourselves, and seeking that honour, which cometh from God only. It is with great awfulness I look at the work before us, and under a deep fense, how unable we are of ourselves, at all to help forward the cause, wherein we defire to be engaged, or to bring honour to that name (either amongst us as a society, or those who are not of our fold) to which the nations may yet be feen to gather. It is defirable.

C 2

firable, however, that our dwelling may be deep, that the wifdom and inftruction we receive, may (though fmall) be pure; that if we venture to move, the cloud may fenfibly be taken off the tabernacle, and we careful to follow the appointed guide, for our days and nights, and be favoured, in this day of deep degeneracy, with an evidence, that we have done what we could."

The following is an account of her journey through Scotland, &c. taken from a fhort journal written by herfelf, and found amongft her papers.

-" The twentieth of the fourth month, 1782, I left York, with my friend M. Proud, for the yearly meeting at Edinburgh, intending from thence, to visit the friends in Scotland, Cumberland, &c. We were at Thirsk on first day, the twenty-first, where we sensibly felt the pure life of religion to be at a low ebb, though the professors thereof are numerous; and fuch as have been anointed for, and employed in, the Lord's work, dwell amongst them. But these being only standard-bearers, whilst they continue exercised in the Lamb's war, and prove their loyalty to the King of kings, by their careful attention to his pointings, and humble walking before him, have need to live under an awful fense of the importance of that fervice to which they are called: that fo, their spirits may be kept favoury, their conversation, likewife, feafoned with the heavenly falt, ministering grace to those that hear. For want of the Lord's fervants, or those in the foremost ranks of the people, being thus preferved near that power, in which their life and their strength confift, great declension has happened to us, as a people; and those, who have been looking for the fubstantial part of religion in them, have, instead of finding its influence, received, by the lightness of the conduct of fuch, a warrant for their own propensities. Under the consideration of these things, I was affected, and feeling the aptness of my disposition to yield to the like infirmities, I was led, renewedly, to beg for strength. Notwithstanding we had to suffer with the seed in this place, and to behold the breaches which are made as in the walls of the royal city, yet, a renewed visitation was extended to many, and especially to the youth; and our minds were a little encouraged to press forward in the work before us, under a fresh sense of divine regard. The next day, we left Thirsk, and my husband, who had accompanied us thus far, went with us a few miles further on this day's journey; and after we parted, my mind felt a covering of divine love to replenish it, with faith and patience; and, from a little sensible experience, I could thankfully fay, with a disciple formerly, " I have left all to follow thee." And under a renewed fense of this holy attachment, and of my own unfitness for the service before me, without frequent baptisms of spirit, and the fanctifying power thereof, I was inwardly favoured with fome new instructions, respecting the office of a minister of Christ, and openings how to fulfil that office: and thus, I was led to acknowledge, that he who had called is faithful, and his grace is fufficient for us, as our dependance is placed thereon, and all confidence in ourselves removed. We attended a meeting on third day, and had painfully to feel the state of things amongst them; and it appeared clear to my mind, that the work was in the Lord's hands, and that he will, in his own time, make manifest the hidden things of darkness; when those that retain a little life amongst them, will be enabled to renew their strength, and shew themselves on the Lord's side, though their numbers may be few. We were favoured in some degree, to relieve our own minds, and left them that afternoon.

The next day we were at a meeting which, for fome time, was a painful fitting, under a fense that the leaders of the people caused them to err, and were crying, "the word of the Lord," when the Lord had not fent them. But after experiencing fomething of the baptism unto death, with our holy High Priest, we were favoured to feel the refurrection of life; in which, judgment was placed on the head of the transgressing nature, and the minds that were defirous to know fomething of the work of religion for themselves, were pointed to the means of redemption from fin. From thence we went to Newcastle, and were at their week-day meeting on fifth day, where truth, measurably, prevailed. On fixth and feventh days, being the twenty-fixth and twenty-feventh of the month, we travelled from Newcastle to Kelso, and were at their meetings on first day, which are very small of friends, but many others came in, especially in the afternoon; and though, at first, they appeared rude and ignorant, yet the power of truth, in which the authority is felt, rose so into dominion, that it became a folemn opportunity. And thus we had

had fresh cause to observe, that it is only by divine ftrength, that we can run through a troop, or leap over the walls of opposition. On second day, we went to Edinburgh, where, on third we rested, and on fourth and fifth attended the yearly meeting, which was but small, there being very few members of fociety of that nation then present. There were feveral, who through neglect of christian difcipline, think they have a claim to the fociety, as being the offspring of friends; others were like the Philistines in whose hands the ark of the testimony is fallen, and esteemed by them as a contemptible thing; there were also present a number of students from distant parts, whose parents are not only members of fociety, but some of them useful therein. On account of all these, our minds were painfully exercifed: and notwithstanding the publick meetings were large, and owned with divine favour, in covering these affemblies with a degree of holy awe, and the minds of some of his fervants with gospel power and authority, to declare the way of life and falvation: yet through all, the fense of deep, hidden, as well as flagrant corruption, fo impressed my mind, that I was led to believe, truth will never prosper in this place, nor the excellency of it appear unveiled, till, not only the branches of the corrupt tree are cut off, but the root fo dug up that the remembrance thereof may rot; and then, there is a hope that the prefent planting may get watered, the ground renewedly cultivated, and fruits appear to the praise of the great Husbandman. Deep discouragement attends the Lord's exercifed fervants in this day, when labour is added to labour, baptifin to bap-CA tifin tism, for those that are dead in trespasses and sins, and for those that are unacquainted, in their own experience, with the glad tidings of the gospel; so that, if they were not at times refreshed with a little bread handed in fecret, and their evidence confirmed, that the foundation of God stands sure, having this feal that the Lord knows them that are his, they would be ready to faint in the work, and to shrink in the day of battle, when the arrows of the archers furround, and the spirits of the people are opposing found doctrine, and crying "prophefy unto us fmooth things." But I have had frequently of late, under these discouraging views, to remember the prophet when he mournfully exclaimed; "I have laboured in vain, and spent my strength for nought;" yet recollecting himself in holy confidence in, and interest with, invisible and divine justice, he added, "but furely my judgment is with the Lord, and my work with my God." From fome necessary baptisms of mind, and renewed evidences that this is enough for any true minister of the gospel to desire, I have been led awfully and humbly to implore increasing strength and ability, to walk before that gracious eye that fees in fecret, without feeking the praife, or regarding the cenfure of men who are not circumcifed in heart and ears, and who cannot difcern, or value, found uncondemnable words, but want their fenfual wifdom and depraved ideas gratified with the divinations of men, and approbation of themselves. We had an exercifing, close, and fearthing opportunity on fifth day evening (after the publick meetings were over) with those under profession with us, and particularly the students; to whom divine regard was eminently eminently manifested, and a powerful call extended, to close in with the present visitation and day of falvation that is offered; whereby they would be redeemed from that wisdom which separates them from the pure fear of God, and the tree of immortal life; and also preserved from going down to the chambers of death, by falling in with those fnares and gilded pollutions, with which the unwearied enemy of our fouls is feeking to entrap and defile us. Their minds were fenfibly affected, at that time, under the power of truth; and he who was pleafed thus to influence their spirits, is alone able to prosper the work.* The next morning we went to Kirkaldie, (by Queen's Ferry) where we had a meeting with the town's people, some of whom behaved well, the glad tidings of the gospel were preached; and a fatisfactory meeting it was. From hence we went that evening one stage further, and purposed next day for Montrose, fortynine miles. The first stage in the morning was to Coupar in Fife, where we felt a confiderable openness for a meeting, but having too much, in our own inclination, fixed our work for this day, we put by this simple feeling, and thought that, if way opened, we would give up to it in our return. A few hours convinced us that our plans were frustrated; for when we arrived at Dundee Ferry, we found ourselves about half an hour too late for the tide, fo that our horses could not be taken over till about that time in the evening, at which we should have been there, had we staid and had a meeting at Coupar in Fife. From Dundee we went to Aberbrothick, which we left next morning for Montrofe, where we had a meeting in the evening with the town's people, who behaved well, and to whom divine regard was powerfully manifested.

* It is difficult to suppress a remark, respecting young men of our society being sent to complete their education at this place; which is, that the advantages of medical improvement are, beyond all comparison, out-balanced by the pernicious principles of insidelity which are imbibed there. Several young persons, religiously hopeful at the time of commencing their studies, have returned from thence deeply possoned in their religious principles; and some who have not been altogether slain in the contest, have, it is feared, become so much wounded, as to endanger their going halting all their days. It is of unspeakable importance for parents and guardians solidly to consider, in their disposal of youth, the danger not only of this, but of every other exposed situation in life. No professional advantages, or qualifications whatever, can be put in competition with the loss or injury of that pure faith and principle, which is our unerring guide, our support and comfort through time.

From hence we went to Inverbervy, a little seaport between Montrose and Aberdeen. Here we found we could not get away, without a meeting amongst the town's people, which was readily provided for, and a very solid company attended; whose minds seemed like the good ground cultivated by the divine hand, for the reception of the seed of the kingdom. Divine aid was eminently extended to us, and to the people, and we were led, publickly and secretly, to return the gratitude of our hearts to him whose works alone can praise him, and who, in infinite wisdom, after these favoured opportunities, is sometimes pleased to lead his poor, weak, servants, as from the holy mountain, and from tasting the animating wine of the kingdom,

that,

into the wilderness; and to cause them, like their Master, to experience something of the forty days fast, and the power of the Tempter; that so, their own inability may be proved, their humble confidence renewed in the divine arm, they drawn from having any confidence in the flesh, and taught not to live by bread alone. From hence we proceeded to Stonehaven, and fat with the few friends there, in whom the life of religion is weak. We went to Aberdeen that evening, and next day had a close time with the friends there. The same afternoon we reached Old-meldrum, and next day fat a meeting with them, where we found we could not get away without fitting in the families, and having a publick meeting with the town's people; the first we fet about the fame day, and had a fatisfactory meeting with the people in the evening. We found things very low amongst the friends, but a comfortable hope, that of the youth would be raifed up fuch as would be qualified to support the cause of truth, which is ready to fall in the streets, and the principles thereof almost forgotten by those that profess them, particularly in departing from the plain language, and lofing the diftinguishing marks of their profession; whereby the cross is evaded, and the people's minds become like the high-way ground. We finished the visit to the families at Kilmuck, and went from thence on feventh day evening for Aberdeen, and staid there the next day. My companion attended the meetings, where she had good service, and many people of the town came in. I had been unwell for fome time before with pain in my face and teeth, which had now fo increased upon me, with fresh cold, that, feeling no particular draft to the friends or people, and scarce being fit to move, I staid in the house that day, in order to use some means for recovery, which were not ineffectual, and next morning we set forward for Urie. Here the friends of Stonehaven met us, but it was a painful opportunity, and little of the divine life to be selt. We reached Montrose in the evening, and next day went to Aberbrothick, where we used some means to obtain a meeting, but they not being essectual, we were easy to leave the place; and went forward, without any other meeting in the way, to Edinburgh, where we arrived on fifth day evening, the differenth of the month.* The next evening we reached Kelfo, and Morpeth on the feventeenth, from whence we went next morning to Newcastle to breakfast, and attended both their meetings; in which we had deep, fearching, but honest labour.

* From Aberbrothick she writes thus to a friend; "The minds of many of the people in this land feem preparing, like the good ground, to receive, in childlike simplicity, the ingrafted word; and though it may be long before fruits appear, yet if those that come this way, follow the fimple openings of truth, in their floppings at places where there are no friends, and get baptized into the states of the people, it appears clear to us, that such will be instrumental in helping forward the light of the perfect day of the gospel, which has dawned in many of these parts; but it is under present chastisement for neglect of duty, that I acknowledge we have not fufficiently trod this path. One material omission the week before last, has laid a foundation for repentance through this land, if not through time, unless our Master sometime fends us again to pay debt and interest; because, from that one neglect, has proceeded many entanglements, and preventions of doing right. We have great cause to believe and acknowledge, that the divine aid which hath been afforded, particularly in this land, hath been great; and though it may have been chiefly on account of the people, yet gratitude hath covered our minds for it, and it occasions us to feel more deeply any want of faithfulness."

The following letters were written a few days after her getting out of Scotland.

"It is a favour when we are at liberty to feel one another, in the cementing bond of pure love and unchangeable fellowship; for, really, in journeys of this kind, our minds are often so stripped of fatisfactions like these, that instead of feeling as if we belong to any body, or have any outward source of comfort, the state of the pelican in the wilderness feems most similar to ours; and, no doubt, for wise ends, our minds are thus clothed with abstractedness, and separated from domestick blessings; for our eye then being single, and we considering ourselves servants that have need to watch every pointing of the Master, we are in the greater sitness to receive that divine light, in which, and by which only, every service in the church can be rightly accomplished."

"We are convinced it is right for those who go into Scotland, to go without plans, or fixed times for things, and simply to attend, day by day, to the openings of truth, giving up their time freely, and considering themselves in no respect their own. Such as thus faithfully visit Scotland, and get deep enough in their minds to bring up such weapons as will penetrate the minds of the people, and reach the divine life, rather than aimmerely at convincing the judgment, will have, I am persuaded, great service in that land, and find the free dedication of their time to be an acceptable facrifice."

"We have now got as into our own camp, where close painful labour is often our lot; which being almost continual, and without apparent effects, we are fometimes ready to shrink from the work, and turn our faces homeward, considering ourselves, in every sense of the word, unprofitable servants. But I have thus far found, that when we have been so reduced, as hath been the case, that we durst not look for great things, divine

bour; and a degree of quietude, refignation, and ferenity of mind, closed the day. The next day we rested, and on third were at Shields, fourth at Sunderland, fifth at Benfieldside, fixth at Newbiggin, seventh at Allondale, first at Aldston, and second at Cornwood: at all which, the effects of an inattention to the unerring spiritual guide, were deeply felt by us; and, from place to place, our spirits were pained in viewing the declension and desolation which have spread themselves, even amongst the foremost classes of the people; so that some of those who have appeared as shepherds over the flock, have been overtaken therewith, smitten by the hand of the enemy, and proved their disqualification for service; whereby many that knew strength hath been most administered, and the blessings that attend our thus dwelling in the deeps, have been couched under these feelings; and the spirit of discernment hath so proceeded therefrom, that we have had humbly to admire the dealings of the divine hand, which, by reducing his fervants, exalteth his own caufe. When felf is most brought down, there is least anxiety about the fruits of our labour; they are left to the great Hufbandman, who causeth the rain to descend on the just, and on the unjust; and furely it is enough for us to experience our meat and our drink to be an obedience to the will of our heavenly Father: for thereby, we get food that the world knows not of, and feel ourselves bound to his truth, though many may forfake it. We are reconciled to fusfer therewith, seeing with an eye of faith, that notwithstanding the declension amongst us, the fmiting of the shepherds, some in being happily removed from the evil to come, and others by the hand of the enemy, and the scattering of the sheep, yet the promise will be fulfilled, upon the little ones: and thefe keeping to their Judge and Lawgiver, they shall with the Lamb, experience a victory."

not

not the fure foundation, but whose eyes were fixed upon man, and whose walking was circumscribed by the appearance of others, have been fcattered from the place of true feeding, and thus want an anchor to their fouls in the time of trial. This the spirit of truth would have amply supplied, had it been made the object of their researches, instead of the honour, the wifdom, and the complicated gratifications of man in his depraved state. But in the course of these meetings, particularly at Newbiggin, Allondale, and Cornwood, we felt an evidence that the divine promife will be fulfilled upon the little ones, and that there are of this number, who, if they keep faithful under the preparing hand, will be raifed up to be standard-bearers in the work and house of their God. But oh the danger of even these, that have been several times dipped as in Jordan, not abiding the day of further trial, wherein nothing but the pure gold will stand; because the fiery baptism of the spirit, is so superior to every thing but what is of its own durable nature, that whatever has been mixed with it must, in this test, be swept away; that the vessel which is formed of the refidue, may be fo pure as to be entitled to the infcription of, "holiness unto the Lord." As it is for want of this patient dedication of heart to the operation of truth, that many veffels amongst us have been little better than founding brafs or tinkling cymbals to the people, having no authority from that of which they fpoke, nor discovering an alliance to the master by following his holy pattern, my heart has been led fervently to implore for myfelf, and for a number of these, to whom I felt united in our heavenly Father's love, that what soever may be the sufferings of the present day, and howfoever one may fall on one hand, and another on another, our eye may be fixed on the Rock of our strength, and our faith so replenished, that though the feet may be placed as in the very bottom of Jordan, we may not flinch therefrom, nor feek an easier path than that which the wrestling feed of Jacob have ever tred; nor have any greater joy than to be united by an exercise of spirit to our holy Head, whether in fuffering or in rejoicing. We had, in all these places, the renewed affiftance of that spirit which helpeth our infirmities, teacheth how to pray and travail in spirit, and how to minister to the states of the people; whereby fome of the hidden things of darkness were fearched out, the strayed of the flock invited to the fold, and the little travailing remnant were encouraged to go forward on their way. We had a uniting feafon at Cornwood, in that pure fellowship of spirit, which supplieth every member in the body with fresh vigour to perform its function.—From hence, with our friends M. J. and J. W. we went to a meeting in Cumberland: it was a time of deep exercise of mind, but in faithfulness thereto, the power of truth rose into dominion, and we had reason to hope it was a profitable time to divers. We left this place, and in the afternoon were at another meeting, which was, for a time, painful beyond description; but by an humble waiting, it was discovered that the people were fed with an unfound ministry, that the ark was taken into the hands of the uncircumcifed, and that there was a number who loved to have it fo. The power and authority of truth arofe, by which

which we were enabled to place judgment on that spirit, which was feeking to support the testimony with unfanctified hands, and to have their honour from men, forgetting that holy anointing and preparation of heart, whereby the Lord becomes fanctified in all those that draw nigh unto him, and the bread that he gives them to break receives a bleffing upon it, in that it shall not be void, but prove a visitation of his love to those to whom it is fent, whether they will hear or forbear. Here we had afresh to observe, that where ministers maintain their inward exercise, and keep near to their gifts, the spirit of true discernment, which searcheth all things, is not wanting to prove, from the line in which it leads them, the rectitude of their ministry to the living and wife in heart; who judge not by the fight of the eye, or the hearing of the ear, but by the unerring evidence of truth, which remains to be the favour of life unto life. Our minds were thankful, under the fresh sense of divine favour and strength, in being found worthy to fuffer with the fuffering feed, and with the little remnant that are thus exercifed, and who belong to this meeting: to thefe, though they are weak, the bread of encouragement was broken.

Next morning we fet forward, and on our way, I received an account from my husband who was then in London, of the death of his father, and that he purposed going over with the friends who had attended the yearly meeting, to accompany his fifter, and to pay a visit to his mother and friends on this affecting occasion; reasons with which which my judgment led me to coincide, though I felt myself deeply affected with so unexpected a circumstance; and having received a letter conveying forrowful intelligence on various subjects, I was ready, with the additional concern of the important fervice in which we were engaged, to fink under the general pressure of my mind. But in this fituation, I had fresh cause to recur to that divine and invisible arm which drew me out; and in the feeling whereof I could then fay, with a degree of holy confidence, "Lord I have left all to follow thee," to that station into which I apprehended myfelf called, though but a child, and to nothing short of a disciple of the Lamb, to fight under his banner, and to prefer his work to every gratification or concern of my own. I found it was an easy thing to say, I will follow thee wherefoever thou leadest; but when our fidelity is tried with cross occurrences in our natural feelings, united to the fresh painful sense, that the foxes have holes, &c. then are we ready to fhrink, and defire that the cup may pass from us, forgetting that all must be left to the great Dispofer of all things; that fo with holy confidence, our resolutions may be, " though thou slay me, yet will I trust in thee." Under this dispensation, I was afresh stripped, and became a suppliant at wisdom's gate; where, I found, I had nothing to receive for my help, but a patient submission to the divine will, and renewed strength, simply and fingly, to wait, not only respecting circumstances relating to my focial concerns, but in the line of my religious duty, and in the exercise of the gift; feeing that it is only when the eye is fingle, that the body is full of light. We attended the next meeting, which for a time was inexpressibly dark and painful; but being engaged fervently to travail for the refurrection of life, we had renewedly to acknowledge, that our labours were bleffed, and strength afforded for that time, to awaken a number from a state of spiritual death, and to shew them the deplorable fituations they were in. We proceeded to another meeting, and on first day attended both the meetings there; in the first of which we were enabled to relieve our minds from the weight which, in the forepart, deeply affected us, and it was a time of renewed favour. Numbers will not hear either the Master or the servant when found doctrine is delivered unto them: but the most fine gold becoming changed, and they remembering fomething of the work of the Refiner, but not keeping under it themselves, are making fomewhat for the people which is specious, and feeds their itching ears, but which at the same time is putting death into the pot: fo that for want of those that hear recurring to the witness for God, the true spirit of prophecy, the feed of the kingdom becomes stifled, and total infensibility ensues; a flate over which, in this county, we had deeply to mourn. The meeting in the afternoon was filent, and our minds preserved in great resignation. On 3d day following we went to Moorhouse and Kirkbride, on 4th at Wigton and Bolton, on 5th at Berkfoot and at Maryport, and on 6th at Allonby and Broughton. The closeness of the exercise in meetings, and in travelling, had by this time fenfibly affected or reduced our strength and spirits; but resting on 7th day with a friend helped to reftore us a little: yet the wounded and captivated ftate of us as a people, and especially in this county, renders a little present rest, like the eating of the passover, with bitter herbs; for how can the fervant rejoice where the Master reigns not! On 1st day we fat with the friends at Pardshaw, where divine regard was renewedly extended to us and to them, in opening the book of His law, and discovering the transgressions of the professors thereof. The fame evening we rode to Whitehaven, and had a meeting there the next day the 10th, which was painful; but a little oppressed remnant were strengthened; for which thankfulness ought to arise, and gratitude cover our spirits, notwithstanding we, as the poor fervants and offfcouring of all things, are often abased under the fense of our own nothingness, and of our omisfions and commissions; for on these the compas-Conate eye of the Master condescends to look, when we seé ourselves, and are prostrate before him, under the fense of how liable we are to fwerve to the right hand or to the left, from the clear and pure openings of truth in our religious fervices, without a close attention of mind thereto. This requires a previous strippedness, and baptism of spirit, that our own activity may be reduced, and subjected to the Power that quickeneth and giveth life, and that, likewife, unprofitable timidity and fear of man, may become fo removed, that we can, with fingleness and resignation, depend folely upon the simple revelation of the divine will. For though it is needful for our refinement, and fitness for service, to be clothed with the fense of our weakness, and the infuffi-

the

ciency

ciency of our wifdom and difcernment in the mysteries of the kingdom, and in performing the least work for the spiritual building; yet on this, when called to labour, our eye should not be fixed, but rest, with faith, on the invisible arm of divine power; that being in a fituation ready to receive help from it, we may be therewith content, and favoured with that bleffing which renders acceptable the fmallest offering, or the bread that may be compared but to the barley loaf. We went to another meeting, where things are very low, fome of the members being fo weak as to let fall fome of the fundamental principles of our profession; whereby the few that are faithful are oppressed with the feed, and are ready to fink under discouragements, and also with some appearances in the ministry, concerning which we felt no answer of life as unto life. Here we lodged at the house of our valuable friends J. and B. D. who next day accompanied us, with some other friends, to Kefwick. where we had a pretty large and fatisfactory meeting amongst the town's people. On fifth day the thirteenth, we attended the week day meeting. and monthly felect meeting at Greyfouthen, where gracious condescension was eminently extended to us, and to the members thereof; and we parted with many of our friends on that fide, in much affectionate fellowship, and sympathy with each others' tried fituations, arifing from the deep declenfion and defolation which widely fpread over us as a people. Next morning we rode to Ifell meeting, in a very ftormy, tempestuous day, so much fo, that the friends belonging to the meeting durst not venture out, except three men, for whom, in a cold damp meeting-house, we waited in our wet clothes three quarters of an hour; having no better accommodations for ourselves or horses, than a bare shelter from the heavy rain that fell here. We fat down with the few that came, and our guides, ready to conclude that, under these circumstances, it would be an unavailing attempt to have our minds properly flayed; but he who mercifully condescends to visit the two or three that gather in his name, was pleafed eminently to own us that day. I remembered, and had to open the passage, "Blessed is that servant that watcheth, and keepeth his garment, and who, when his Lord cometh, is found ready." It appeared to my mind that all those who have enlisted under the spiritual, unconquered Captain, have received a mark thereof, a change of heart, an awful covering of spirit, a loving one another, and means whereby fuch might stand in readiness for the word of command; and that therefore the peculiar bleffing of the divine hand rests upon these faithful fervants, who when not actually in fervice, fo remember their office, as to be fit, when called thereto, to step into it, and move only in that raiment, and with that armour, which the mafter gives them. For want of this watchful, attentive care, in times of withdrawing, many amongst us, when there has been an opening for labour, have not been found ready, nor approved worthy, to advocate the heavenly cause; and thus the warfare has not been maintained, but the battle is retarded, Israel falls before his enemies, and the accurred thing is in the tribe of Judah. At the close of this meeting, where my mind had been led to centre to a quiet dependance on the smallest evidence of the divine will, after some days of deep probation, and frequent defertion of spirit, the aforesaid passage, " bleffed is that servant, &c." powerfully revived and spread before me, and, with a voice intelligible to my spiritual ear, applied it to myfelf; which introduced fuch a calm over my mind, and feparation from the natural feelings thereof, as I never before experienced. Under this fense, I concluded it was the last meeting I should ever be at; that the dedication of my heart, and fome afflictive dispensations that were past, had proved acceptable, and that now there was no obstruction to my final diffolution; nor an attachment in me to any thing below: a fituation of mind fo different from what I usually felt, when I have feared that the closeness of my connections had the afcendency over my love, and travail of spirit for the cause of truth, that I wondered at the change. I looked towards my friends, faw fome of them in their places, and feeling myself in my own, without a cord to break, I apprehended that, in a very little time, I should be gathered to that eternal habitation of rest, whereinto I never before fo fenfibly entered, and of which I had never fuch a foretaste. It was nothing that elated me, my natural ideas were dormant, but what I experienced feemed folid fubstantial truth. After the meeting broke up, and I was making the necessary preparations for proceeding to the next meeting, there was no interruption to my mind, till riding along the road, with a fresh, awful application to the Lord, and breathing that I might not rest too much under this impression, and that if there was any other

other end to answer than what I had seen, it might be discovered; lest by looking too much at an opening fo comfortable to myfelf, I should be in danger of neglecting a continued exercise of spirit, and the fervice I might be called to from place to place; and thereby render that which was intended a bleffing, a block in my way in preffing after fo defirable an end as had opened therein: thus waiting to fee further the way cast up for me, I thought I clearly discovered, that it was a mark of divine regard at that time extended, in order to shew me the excellent, ultimate, effect of what I had had to open to others; and the need there was for me to attend to it myfelf, during the courfe of my own pilgrimage; and also to remove an idea, that the ties of nature are fo interwoven with my attachment to eternal excellency and purity, that the feparation must be, like the furnace being heated feven times hotter than it had before been experienced. Instead of this, I had to behold, in humble admiration, the works of an almighty hand in the deeps, and how, when our hearts are upright before him, he invisibly works our deliverance, by means which the unenlightened understanding of man cannot comprehend. When the power of truth predominates, we fee, in the vision of light, its fuperiority to every natural endowment or gratification; fo that the infurmountable difficulties that are beheld by the natural eye, are fubjected, and the mountain of the Lord is exalted on the top of all the hills. In commemoration of this token of divine regard, my mind is bowed, under the fense of my own unworthiness, and how unable I am, notwithstanding this view, to dwell in a state of preservation and acceptance, without wrestling, from time to time, for that faith which overcometh, and that patience whereby we are kept in the hour of temptation: for if the Lord keep not the city, the watchman watcheth but in vain. After the meeting at Ifell we went to Coldbeck, where we had a fuffering time, but were enabled in a good degree to fearch out the caufe. Next day we attended a meeting at Mofedale, where we had comfortably to observe that the Master's feet had been, though in general things are very low. On first day, the fixteenth, we were at both their meetings at Penrith, where we painfully felt the oppression of the feed, as in many other places. That evening we rode to Terril, and next morning had a meeting there; where the necessity of those who are called to the ministry sitting loose from outward connections and profits, and following the Master whithersoever he leads them, was clearly fet forth. From hence we went to Strickland meeting, and on our way, I had a fall from my horse, with which I was hurt, but attended the meeting, which was favoured, and I gradually recovered. From Strickland we went to Hawkshead, and from thence to Swarthmore, where many not of our fociety attended; and it proved an eminently favoured feafon. Our next meeting was at Height which was a low time. We then proceeded to another meeting, rested and wrote on 7th day; and on first sat both their meetings, where we had fecretly to mourn over, and publickly to discover, the affecting situation of those who, from year to year, have been divinely favoured, and, like the vineyard we read of, dug about, fenced, and visited by the good Husbandman: but oh, the falling fhort! one may plant, and another may water, yet as the increase is of the Lord, and He not being devotedly fought unto, for that dew of heaven which renders us fruitful, and that pruning hand which would keep the branches clean, numbers, after having been planted choice vines, have become the degenerate plants of a strange vine unto the Lord; and notwithstanding they keep a greenness, and an appearance of life, it was clear to the view of our minds, that if there was not a getting deeper, even to the washing pool, and being stripped of themselves, the princes also arising from the dust of the earth and anointing the shield, that spiritual death will greatly increase amongst them, and the judgments of the Lord for disobedience will ensue. We took the week following, Preston, Grayrig, Sedberg, Dent, Garsdale, Ravenstonedale, and Lartington; and also had a fatisfactory meeting at Bowes, where are none of our fociety; and at the others, we were favoured with strength for the exercife that fell to our lot therein. The first day following, we attended the meeting at Staindrop, and another in the evening at Bishop Aukland; on fecond day we went to Durham to their quarterly meeting, attended the feveral fittings thereof: in all which we were enabled, far beyond our expectation, to relieve our minds, by honeftly, in the fear of the Lord, and not of man, expressing our sense of the state of things amongst them; and it was a time of renewed favour. From thence we went forward, and at a meeting wherein the uncircumcifed spirit was painfully felt to prevail in the forepart thereof, but our help and fafety depending upon upon our going down to the brook, we were engaged patiently to wait for divine clothing, knowing that it would be dangerous to go against them in untried armour, notwithstanding the cause might be good: and we may thankfully say, that good is the word of the Lord, and efficacious to the smiting of the Goliaths of this day."

Her own account of this journey ends here; but it appears that she proceeded from this place, and visited the meetings at Stockton, and Yarm, back to Benfieldside, then Ayton, Bilsdale, and Kirby, and returned home about the middle of the seventh month.

After she had got out of Scotland, she and her companion felt their minds disposed to salute the friends of the monthly meeting of Old Meldrum with an epistle; a copy whereof follows.

"Dear Friends!

"As in our travelling along, we have frequently felt our minds covered with an earnest engagement for your preservation, and a sense of the love of our heavenly Father towards you, which engaged us to pay you a visit, we are drawn in the renewed extendings thereof, to salute you with a sew lines, and according to the ability received, to strengthen the little life that is amongst you; that the elders may be gathered to the true place of feeding, the middle-aged arising may become nen and women of valour for God, and the routh having examples set before their eyes of a teady circumspect walking, seasoned with divine virtue, may be engaged, by the efficacy of the same holy principle, to succeed their parents, and the faithful in all ages, in carrying forward the Lord's work, and in His name, which is His power, fetting up their banners. But, dear friends, as there are many impediments which have hindered us as a people, both in this land and in yours, from advancing in our spiritual progress, and increasing our strength in the Lord, let us inquire into the cause whence they have come, and to what they will tend; for if we had kept to the fure foundation, and in all things confidered ourselves the followers of a crucified Lord, rather than nominal members of a religious fociety; and been concerned to walk even as He walked; the fnares of the enemy would not have prevailed to have led fo many captives into a strange land; because, against the Rock of ages, whereon we might have been built, the gates of hell shall never be able to prevail. But for want of keeping an eye open to this preserving Power, a spirit of indifferency hath crept in, and, whilst many have flept, tares have been fown; which as they fpring up, have had a tendency to choke the good feed, those tender impressions, and reproofs of instruction, which would have prepared our fpirits, and have bound them to the holy law and testimonies of truth. Thus, ffrength hath been wanting to maintain the discipline of the church, in that purity wherein it was first established; and a door hath opened for increasing liberties. Hence, hath enfued a mixing with the spirit, and customs of the world; fo that those who have not been taught the fame doctrines, but are looking upon us, may query, "where is your God?" feeing, that though we profess to be led and guided by the spirit of truth, our fruits differ not from theirs; but the cross is removed out of the way. As one deviation from the path our predecessors walked in, conformable to the precepts of Christ, painfully affected our minds, both when our lot was cast amongst you, and since; we feel not easy without renewedly observing, that, in the promife of the restoration to Israel, it was said, "I will turn to the people a pure language;" and knowing that this gospel day is still more glorious than that, if we did but live in the light thereof, which would clearly discover to us the corrupt fource of flattering titles, and feeking to gratify the vain mind of man, how can we, without facrificing the principle of truth, which leads and guides into all truth, give up that pure language to which our forefathers were turned, and adopt the unfound words of You to a fingle person; and calling the days of the week and months by the heathen names; and those, our masters and mistresses, who are not really fo; forgetting the command to call no man, master. Is not this returning to the night of apostacy, and in our dealings and converse with men, crucifying afresh the Son of God, and putting him to open shame, by thus denying, or refusing to bear his cross and testimony to the world ?

"We believe there is a number amongst you, who, by example, have been trained in a deviation from our holy profession; and these we tenderly address, and exhort to feel for themselves after the influence of that holy spirit, which leads its followers in the same path, however remote from outward help their fituations in life may be; for the peculiar privilege of thefe is, they need not that any man teach them, but as this fame divine anointing teacheth them all things. Though you may have but few to strengthen your hands, by their example and fympathy with you in your honest endeavours to break down the partition walls, which the enemy has raifed to prevent your advancement to the perfect day of God; yet be not difmayed in your labours; but remember the fervent zeal of our predecessors in the truth; how they endured the perfecutions of that day, and how, with unconquerable fortitude and refignation to the Lord's will, they fleadily pursued the path of true felf-denial, and fought the good fight of faith. And if we, in this day of deep declenfion, look to the Rock of our strength, we cannot fail to find that it is a day which calls for diligence; and that whatever pointings of duty we are favoured with, our prefervation depends upon a faithfulness thereto. And therefore, beloved friends, be ye engaged to fee what it is that keeps you in a state of weakness, and prevents your feeling the ftrengthening-and confolating influence of the fpirit of Christ; that so, you may be enabled to remove the impediment out of the way, be faithful to the Lord, and stand in the authority of his truth; that endeavouring to rule your own houses well, and to have your children in subjection with all gravity, you may know his baptizing power upon your spirits, in your assembling together; and your fecret prostration and fervent breathings, will be acceptable to his holy eve, and bleffed by his bountiful hand; hand; and in your meetings for discipline, you will likewise be seasoned with the falt of the covenant, and by your honest endeavours to keep the camp clean from all diforderly walkers, you will grow stronger and stronger, and your minds become united together in the bond of true peace. Thus, may it please the Lord to operate upon your spirits, and to influence the youth amongst you to a watchful attention to their thoughts, their words, and actions; that being preserved from mixing with those, who would draw away their minds from the discoveries of truth, and centre them in the corrupt language, and changeable customs of the world, they may prefer a religious awfulness upon their spirits, and seek for that pure fear of the Lord which is a fountain of life, preferving from the fnares of death, and fecuring a fafe hiding-place in the day of trouble. With fatisfaction we acknowledge, that we felt, whilst with you, that the hand of the Lord has been at work upon the minds of the youth, and that some of these have submitted thereto; to whom our spirits were, and are led into near fympathy, and filled with an earnest defire for their prefervation and progress in that good work which is begun in their hearts. Be encouraged, beloved friends, to hold on your way, and more fully to fubmit your necks to the holy yoke; that thereby you may be made willing to fuffer for the cause of truth; and though you may not have many examples and helpers in the Lord, yet being engaged to dwell near the Root of divine life, and feeking for strength therefrom, you will feel the progressive dispensation of the heavenly Visitant, and grow in stature, from the state of children, to young men in the Lord; let situations be what they may, and outward advantages ever fo great, we are abundantly convinced, that whoever experience an inheritance in the truth, and an establishment therein, must purchase it for themselves, learn to live on manna of their own gathering, and know from whence all their fresh springs proceed. And now, dear friends, the fervent defire of our spirits is, that you may be ftirred up to a renewed fense of the declenfion of the prefent day, and under it, be engaged to feek for strength to stablish you in every good word and work; that being clothed with a zeal according to knowledge, for the profperity of Zion, and the enlargement of her borders, you may become established as a city set upon a hill, having the light of the gospel day upon your dwellings.

" Benfieldfide, 7th month 7th, 1782."

C H A P.

C H A P. III.

Visit to her Husband's Relations in Ireland.—Journey into Norfolk, &c.—Visit to the Meetings of Friends in Ireland.

N the 11th month 1782, she felt an inclination and freedom of mind, to accompany her husband into Ireland, on a visit to their relations. The deeply instructive exercises which she met with previous to her landing in Ireland; with her humble, watchful state of mind and engagements there, may in part be collected from the following letters, which, except the first, she wrote in that land.

"This place (Holyhead) is uncomfortable to ftay at, amongst a great deal of company, and no woman but myself; and though it is made easier by their great civility, yet the journey altogether is an awful thing. On furveying my inducements for coming and impartially examining myself, I have not yet found any uneafiness, though I am low, and our present situation is a trial of both faith and patience. Indeed the many rocks and shoals attending us in our religious and civil concerns through this trying pilgrimage, will, I apprehend, ever prove a trial of these; and therefore, by the direction of the Best of Pilots, to guard against them, and to steer wisely through life, is the work of our day; and will open most clearly the prospect of the haven of durable reft."

[&]quot;I was greatly pleafed when we got to

Holyhead, hoping foon to be in Dublin, and dreading the water but little. Here our disappointments began. We went out to sea next day, were tossed about for fourteen hours, and I then returned extremely ill; fo much fo, that it became a matter of doubt to my husband whether he should not have to bury me there. I thought as foon as my head was laid after our return, that I perceived a cup bitterer than death; for that death, except on R. G.'s account, I should not have regretted, fo shaded are all the domestick enjoyments and temporal bleffings of life, when, abstracted from them, we are called upon, faithfully and with fingleness of heart, to do the will of our heavenly Father. To have a meeting at Holyhead presented with great weight, and at the same time the appearance of things told me that, on various accounts, (my own bodily weakness not the least) it was an impossibility. I was afraid, but I think I was not rebellious. In the depth of diftrefs, I offered myself as one unable to answer the requiring, hoping the offering would be accepted, and that fome ram would be caught in the thicket; here the call feemed renewed to obedience, and not facrifice; and I faw that if any thing short of the demand was offered, though I even exerted myfelf in faithfulness in Ireland, as I promised to do, I might be suffered to fall into a snare, and return from thence, instead of the reward of peace, with the query, Who hath required this at thy hands? Prefent obedience, and fubfervience to the operation of truth on our minds, is no doubt what will preferve us on this fea of glass mingled with fire; for if we keep with the life, and move therein, it will keep us humble, reduce our confidence in the flesh, and draw us down into fuffering with it. When our dwelling is as amongst the pots, and no goodliness remaineth in us, then we know in whom is eternal help, and the travail of our spirits is for ability to look towards his holy habitation. Our first failing was on fourth day, and by fixth day I was got fomething better, when the captain, and a great number of passengers were disposed to fail, and none of them more fo than ourselves, if the wind would take us, which, according to the feelings of my mind, I believed would not; but I have no cause to think it was unacceptable to try the fleece again; which we did, and after getting out of the harbour, the wind turned against us, and grew very rough. The veffel was violently toffed, and at one time we were in great danger of foundering. I lay quietly as I could, beholding the wonders of an almighty hand concerning us; and in the deeps, both spiritually and temporally, I felt myself a Jonah, when the people were crying, that there was one on board; and all was tremendous about me. The danger we were in was evident, but my hope never failed me; which I esteemed an unspeakable favour, and which led me to a greater willingness than I had before felt, to give up to the meeting, or any thing else that was required. We were out this time but about four hours, and after we landed, a large merchant fhip was wrecked in our fight, but no lives loft. My fituation now became awful; there feemed no way but refignedness to the meeting, and that I could not see was to be till first day. My husband

I perceived was afraid, for he confidered us accountable for whatever the cause suffered by us, especially as there never was a meeting there before. On first day morning we were tried again, for the wind being fair, we prepared for failing, and when all was ready for going on board, a ftorm came on, and the captain durst not venture to loofe the ship in the harbour, believing that if he did it would be foon wrecked. We then returned again, and the time came on for the people to go to some place of worship; when finding an empty house near the inn, we engaged it, and felt most easy to give notice to but a few, that we were going to fit in our usual manner to worship, and that if they, or any others, chofe to accompany us, we had no objection. Before we got to the place, many were there, and more followed; and to our humble admiration, divine affiftance was near, and wonderfully helped us over that fitting. At the conclusion, the people were desirous of another in the evening, which, when we had confidered it, we confented to; and if I may venture to fay, it was crowned with good, and the melting operation of truth appeared to be experienced by many of the people, who behaved with great folidity. The next evening tide fuited for our paffage, and with peaceful minds we embarked, and were but nine hours from bay to bay. Thus have we cause to turn back to this page of our lives, with humble gratitude of mind, and to acknowledge that a fimple pointing of duty, and a fimple discharge thereof, is productive of solid fatisfaction, when, on the other hand, no exertion or anxiety of our own, can furnish us with one grain grain of it, nor can we, by taking thought, add one cubit to our stature!"

----" Often, very often, fince I faw your faces, has my mind visited you in affectionate nearness; but I have feldom felt greater inability, than fince I came into this land, thus to converse with my friends; for as our coming was sudden, it has occasioned deep searchings of heart, for preservation, and direction how to move in the line of wisdom.

"We met with a very cordial reception in Ireland; the hospitality and affection of our friends were not unacceptable to a poor stranger like me; nevertheless my mind has not seemed at liberty. as I could have wished, to enjoy that society which is gratifying to felf. It is good for us renewedly to feel ourselves not our own, to stand resigned to the divine will, and to know it to be our meat and drink to do it. Every little additional experience tends to convince us, that herein confifts our most folid and permanent satisfaction; and were our disposition of resistance to the painful preparation for devotedness removed, we should more often have feelingly to acknowledge, that with the divine bleffings, there is added no forrow; but we make forrows for ourselves, we add that which our gracious Benefactor hath not in store for us. A path exempt from trials is what I have no right to expect, and what I hope I am learning not to defire. A patient fubmission to every divine dispensation, is what I wish for an increase of; that so, the mingled cup of life may prove a profitable draught, and imprefs me, more and more, with an humble fense of the multiplied blessings bestowed upon me: for by this means I believe we shall increase in knowledge how to move and conduct ourselves, amidst the various temptations, besetments, and cross occurrences, incident to this probationary state.

"We went pretty directly from Dublin for Clonmel, after the half-year's meeting, and spent two days very much to my instruction, at Ballitore. We staid about ten days amongst our relations, who are valuable and kind, and then went for Carlow quarterly meeting, where were Robert Valentine and his companion, &c. I think, upon the whole, it was a very favoured gathering, though here, as in our land, the world and its spirit has made great devastation and scattering amongst the gathered tribes."

"We look with a degree of fatisfaction at our return. A little rest to body and mind will be truly acceptable, as our visit to our relations seems now completed. Our passage through this land has been encumbered with many thorns, and attended with many trials unforeseen by us. It is a day of deep humiliation, and it sometimes looks as if our judgment was taken away. I want not to make complaints; I wish rather to profit by what I have suffered, and reap instruction from every renewed dispensation of infinite kindness; seeling myself unworthy of the least of His benefits, and that, without His peculiar care, I shall be overwhelmed, and warped aside from the stability of the truth: but by being baptized into a deep fense of my own weakness and frailty, I have been led to acknowledge, that even the bitter things are sweet; seeing, that in infinite wisdom, they are ordered for the strengthening of our spiritual appetite, and bringing down that part in us which is at enmity with the cross, and loves not its government in the mind."

Her home for feveral years after her marriage, was at Foston, a village ten miles from York. This was to her a comfortable retirement, when not engaged abroad in the service of truth. But though gratifying to nature, and a desirable resting place, her concern for the advancement of her great Master's cause, which was her most desired meat and drink, often called her from this abode, so that she seldom resided there for a month together. It appeared, indeed, that she was unwearied in promoting the cause of truth and righteousness, and willing to spend and be spent for the great Name's sake.

In the fpring of the year 1784, she appears to have been engaged in a visit to the meetings and some families of friends, in Norfolk, and to divers other meetings, as she proceeded to the yearly meeting at London. Of this religious engagement, no regular accounts of her own, have been discovered; the following are the material parts of all that have been collected from her letters.

[&]quot;We had nine meetings last week, at eight different places, besides private opportunities in families, which we durft not avoid; finding the declenfion to be fo great in almost every one, where we have come, and fo few who feem to know it, that we are ready to fay, For Zion's fake we cannot rest nor hold our peace, till at least they are informed of their state."-" We attended their week day meeting at this place, with which we were well fatisfied, it being a time of much instruction, however to my mind; finding by a degree of living experience, that there is indeed a Minister of ministers, on whom we have great cause to wait to be instructed ourselves, in our private, as well as publick duty; that, in all things, we may approve ourselves obedient servants, and good examples to the flock. It was my lot to fit in filence, viewing the great and almost general infenfibility to true religion."

-" We have not only travelled hard, but found much work at places where we have come, finding it rather more than usual in the line of our duty, to bear a testimony, not only to the truth, but against the numerous evils and inconfistencies, which have generally overspread the professors in these parts; and as our peace much depends, in our passing along, in being honest, and speaking the truth without parables, we have been enabled, pretty tolerably, to discharge our duty, and to shew them how far they are from what they pretend to be; though it is hard work, and we find that the more abundantly we manifest our love in this way, the lefs we are loved by many who have been used to smooth things, and have fought to make the truth conform to them, instead of this conduct being brought to, and regulated by the truth. So that indeed many are blind in error, and those that see, will not exert themselves to search their own houses, and remove the inconsistencies that are in them. A mournful prospect appears in these, as well as many other parts; no likelihood of a succession in the truth, and even the present standard-bearers ready to faint. Under these impressions, we seek not great things for ourselves, but rather are disposed to consider it a favour, (great enough for us to expect) if we have our lives for a prey, from one place to another.

"We have little expectation, that in any fittings, our minds will get above the spirits of this people; and till that strength arises which puts the armies of aliens to slight, I trust our lips will be sealed, and we content therewith; for indeed, it is not an easy task to minister to this degenerate age, who think they know all things, and, like the magicians in Egypt, can account for all the works of the divine hand: but what a favour it is, that there is still extended to us as a people, that power which confounds the wisdom of these, and brings to nought their great understanding."

days we have staid at Norwich. It has been to our minds a suffering time, during our stay in that place; but though we have mourned, and perhaps rather murmured at times, yet we have great cause to be thankful for the help wherewith, in infinite kindness, we have been helped. It is a day of great discouragement, and I think I was never more ready to lay down my armour, than in silence this day at meeting. The situation of mind I was in, I found tended to humble and reduce the creature; and as my soul was hungry, even the bitter food I partook of, became sweet, and I saw the profit of these seasons."

at Yarmouth on first, Pakesield on second, Becles on third, Leiston sourth, and Woodbridge to-day, where, as at some other places, we sat in mournful, but I trust instructive silence. What salts at times to our lots in meetings, and sometimes in conversations out of them, seems much like pulling down old houses, and we are often assaid of being choked in the dust; for indeed most of the buildings we see are painfully superficial, and our little labour has been deeply distressing; so that the language of my heart often is, "Who hath believed our report?" but I am thankful in feeling the burden decreasing, as our work seems closing."

In the year following she felt a religious concern to join her friend Rebecca Jones, on a visit to the meetings of friends in Ireland, &c. and having laid the same before the monthly meeting, with the approbation thereof, and the concurrence of the quarterly meeting, she set forward on this journey in the 7th month, 1785. Of this visit there is preferved a short journal written by herself, which is as follows.

" I left home the 13th of 7th month 1785, and spent two nights at York, in order to allow a comfortable opportunity of taking a folid and affectionate leave of my connections there; and on the 15th, went with my husband to Bradford, where, next day I parted with him, he returning to York, and I proceeding with my coufin W. M. (who was to accompany me to Ireland) for Manchester.

"We staid there the next day, being the first of the week, and I was at both their meetings; which favoured to my mind of that righteoufness and wisdom of man, which never can work the righteousness of God nor savour the things that pertain to His kingdom.

" But there is a precious fuffering feed in that place, to which my spirit was renewedly united in the covenant of light and life. On fecond day we went, with many friends, down the water to Warrington, where, on the 19th was held their monthly meeting, which I felt most easy to attend, though I might thereby miss an opportunity of crossing the water, fo early as I otherwise might choose; and I was comfortably fatisfied with this little dedication by the way. I went that evening to Liverpool, and waited till 6th day for a fuitable wind for failing. During this time, was their week day meeting and my spirit was there deeply exercised, on account of fome who were substituting their own righteousness for the righteousness of God, which is inherited in pure faith, in the virtue and power of that creative Word, by which all things were made, that were made in the spiritual creation, and by which, through the reduction of the natural will and wifdom of men, they can no more worship the work of their own hands: and in the strength with which my spirit was renewedly supplied, I attempted to express somewhat on this subject, for which I felt peace. We next day embarked for Dublin, in the Hawke packet, and had a very tedious and diftreffing voyage, being uncomfortably detained, in part for want of wind, and in part by its being contrary; the latter occasioning us to put into the Isle of Man, where we staid two nights, and found a very courteous and hospitable reception from the inhabitants. My mind was attached to them, in the fecret effusion of gospel love, but feeling abundant weakness in myself, and wanting that united exercife which is received by fellow labourers, I did not perceive it to be my wo if I preached not the gospel; and therefore, in an humble trust that the great Shepherd of Ifrael would fend more fuitable fervants for that work in that ifle, and not put my omission in the balance against me, I embarked again with the rest of our company, save one, whom we left dead on the island. Being out longer than we expected, by two days, our provisions were exhaufted; and though through divine protection we did not fuffer much from want, yet it was a favour gratefully to be commemorated, that we were enabled through fome difficulty to land when we did; which, with the instruction conveyed to my mind, under deep discouragement, and close fearching of heart, when all human confolations ftood afar off, afforded humble cause to believe, that this trying dispensation was intended as a necessary me.* On our landing, I foon met with our honourable

* A more particular account of this voyage, with feveral additional instructive remarks, are contained in the following felections from her letters. --- "It is very unexpected to me to write from this port; but so little do we know what, in the course of divine wisdom, shall fall to our lot, that every increase of experience convinces us, there is no fafer or easier situation of mind, than a daily dependance on, and quiet refignation to, Him who knows what is best for us, and what will tend most to His own honour. We failed last fixth day from Liverpool, having got there on third, but the wind not being very fair when we fet out, and turning more against us afterwards, occasioned a troublesome and wearisome passage thus far, not only by contrary winds, and fevere fickness, but by the almost intolerable stench and suffocating closeness of our cabin and lodgings, and the continual wicked, obscene, conversation of our passengers, who are seventy in number. Sometimes, I was afraid it would overcome me, both in body and mind; when recalling to my remembrance the poor Negroes (who, added to what I have mentioned, in a far worse degree, are chained together, under the load of that anguish naturally attendant on a forced separation from the nearest connections in life, and with the prospect of perpetual bondage under cruel taskmasters) my small trials in this line, and indeed in every other, diminished in my view; and the multitude of blessings, in infinite mercy, showered down, so crouded in their place, that at times, instead of repining, I saw abundant cause to inquire, " what am I, that thou art thus mindful of me, and what shall I render unto thee?" We put in at the Isle of Man, and were hospitably received by the inhabitants, whose engaging simplicity, and religious zeal, have attached my mind to them. I am fincerely defirous that if I do nothing for the truth, I may do nothing against it; and when I look thus, I feel a comfortable belief, that even this care shall tend to the furtherance of the gospel, and that it will somewhat open the way for future service in this place; for if the fenfe that attends my mind be right, when the feet of the messengers are more eminently turned nourable friend Samuel Emlen, whose animating company and fatherly kindness, greatly revived me,

ar

into the way of the Gentiles, to Pul and Lud, &c. and to the Isles afar off, this little place will not be forgot, but offerings will be brought here to the mountain of the Lord's holiness, and His glory shall break forth,"

T am fafe arrived in this land, and have humbly to commemorate divine protection, and fecret supporting goodness in my passage hither. The ways of the Most High remain to be ways of wonders, and his acts are past sinding out; nevertheless, he still revealeth secrets, as he did unto Abraham, when a degree of the same faithfulness is, through His humbling power, attained to; and without it, how little do we know, even when we think we know most? Never did I so sensibly enjoy the bosom of the church, which, I may humbly acknowledge, was cordial to receive me; but how much more excellent is that pure faith, which reveals itself when all human consolations stand afar off, and by centring our spirits therein, wonderfully convinces us, that it is the "substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen."

"I feel myself much recovered from satigue, and have gratefully to commemorate divine protection, and secret sustaining help, when the seeble efforts of bodily strength and natural fortitude, seemed unequal to render me that support, which one grain of living saith affords. Oh! what abundant reason we have, not to trust in ourselves, but in Him who died for us, to whose death, if we are not conformable, we cannot fully experience the prevailing power of eternal life."

——" I trust the probation my spirit experienced in our passage here, will not prove altogether an unprositable dispensation, on entering a service, the right performance whereof depends on our being baptized enough, and weaned enough; so that whatever is brought forth may be of the new creation, unconnected with all old heavens, and old earth. And indeed I may say that, before I left home, though my mind was much stripped and tried, I often suspected whether I had fully partaken of the necessary cup of suffering, preparatory to such an undertaking as the present; and believed I should have a trying baptism to and helped me to leave the things that are behind, and to press forward in prospect to a degree of humble dedication to the renewed pointings of duty. My beloved friend R. J. with G. Dillwyn and wife, having performed a family visit to friends in Dublin, were gone to Ballitore, where they found a fimilar engagement to that in which they had been employed; and when I reached them, they had nearly finished, and were almost ready to proceed. In a few days we accordingly fet forward together, viz. G. D. R. J. and myself; our prospects comfortably corresponding one with another, we cheerfully concurred therewith, to travel in company. On the 4th day following we went to Christians Town, and in the evening vifited a family of young people, one of whom was in a declining state of health; to whom, with the rest, instruction and encouragement were handed, to prefer the humbling dispensations of infinite wisdom, to all temporal gratifications. We then returned to our lodgings, and fat with the family; where my beloved companion was enabled, in awful fupplication, to breathe for continued support, and preservation in the path of obedience; which comfortably cemented our spirits together. Next day we went to Rathangan, where we had to travail for the arifings of pure life, under the discouraging apprehension of its being very low in that place; but infinite kindness vouchsafed to own the deep exercise, and graciously fent forth His light and truth, whereby the pass through before I entered upon it; though I now have no doubt but my movings this way, were in the right time. It is an unspeakable blessing to meet with the crucifying power of truth by the way; and the desire of my heart often is, to be more and more in love therewith."

way

way to his holy hill was opened in the demonstration of the spirit and power, and the meeting ended under an humbling commemoration of his goodnefs. In the evening we went to New Park, and next morning to the meeting at Timahoa, which was fmall, and the publick fervice rather laborious, because of the unfitness of many of the professors to receive spiritual things. In the afternoon we went to Prosperous, a new fettled town where there are no members of our religious fociety. We had a meeting there much to the fatisfaction of visitors and vifited; the people behaved well, and we had reafon to believe, by the ownings of truth, that there is a precious feed there. We went to New Park again to lodge, and in the morning fat with the family and others then prefent, and some profitable counfel opened. From thence we went to Edenderry; and next day, being the first of the week, we staid, and were at their own meeting, their preparative meeting, a publick meeting in the afternoon, and in the evening fat with their ministers and elders; at all which, merciful help was near in the needful time, and enabled to discharge our several duties in fimplicity, for which the reward of peace and quietude was not withheld. On fecond day the 8th of 8th month, we came to Oldcastle, and were at their meeting next day, where many people not of our fociety attended; amongst whom there was openness to labour. After meeting we staid with those few in profession with us, when their low estate was felt, sympathized with, and counsel flowed thereto.

On 4th day we went to Cootehill, where are very few friends; they are in a poor shattered situation as to the life of religion, and scarce able to keep up their meetings. Many of the town's people came to the meeting, and it was a folid favoured opportunity; and a comfortable belief attended our minds that there is a precious feed in that place; but the professors of truth are stumbling blocks. We fat down with them felect at the conclusion of the meeting, and found it exercifing work to visit the feed in them, but were enabled honeftly to difcharge our feveral duties.* From thence we went to Castleshane, a place very like Cootehill; and in the evening after the meeting there, reached Grange, near Charlemount, and lodged at the house of --- a visited young man, who, with two others in his family, afford a comfortable profpect of a revival of ancient simplicity, and right zeal in that place. Our spirits were nearly united to them, and the streams of encouraging counsel flowed freely for their refreshment and strength. We were at their meeting next day, being the first of the week, which was a fuffering time; and in the evening, had a very large and fatisfactory meeting of the country people not in profession with us, who behaved well, and in many of whom the witness of truth was raised. Next day we proceeded to go round Lough-Neagh by taking Toberhead,

* In a letter dated the next day, she writes: "Through divine support, mercifully vouchsafed from day to day, we have been enabled to discharge the missions committed, so as to leave each place with a good degree of peace. Indeed it is a relieving consideration, under the discouragements that poor travellers often meet with, that the work is not ours, and that an instrument has only to be passive in the hand of him that useth it, leaving its prosperity, and the honour of the cause, to the all-sufficiency of the divine arm, which can work with us or without us."

Colerain, Ballynacree, Ballimena, Grange, and Antrim; at all which places, we had deeply to lament the low declined state of the professors of truth, not only as to numbers, but in a departure from the precious, preserving, principle of light and life; whereby the living members of the church are kept in their lots and enabled to stand with firmness, as a city fet on a hill, to the praise of His grace who hath called them out of the world, into His marvellous light. The country people coming in at the aforesaid places, tended to the more free circulation of life, wherein the fpring of gospel ministry was fometimes opened; but it was my lot to pass along in gloomy fuffering, and, at times, instructive filence. After meeting at Antrim, the 21st of 8th month, being met by a friend and his wife, we returned home with them, and rested next day; on the evening of which my dear husband came to us from England, and after staying in the neighbourhood where we were, and falling in at divers meetings for discipline with us, he went to Clonmel, and staid till we came near that place before we faw him again. On the 23d we went to Newtown, and next day had a meeting with the few friends there. The knowledge and virtue of true religion feemed very low amongst them, and it was hard work, by deep and fecret exercise, to minister to the pure life. From hence we returned to Lifburn, and attended their monthly meeting, wherein a little strength feemed given me for fome publick labour; but my dear companions were filently baptized under a concern to visit the families of friends in that place, though the time did not appear to be then come. After being at Hillsborough, Lurgan, Ballyhagan, Moyallen, and Ballinderry meetings, we returned to Lisburn, and in about a week performed the fervice; the Minister of ministers being near to hand forth in the needful time (often after long fuffering filence) fuitable instruction and consolation to the visited. Great indifference and infensibility, as to the knowledge of the Lord's dealings with His people, prevail in that place, though a little tried remnant dwell amongst them.* At the close of this visit, came on the quarterly meeting at Ballinderry for the province of Ulfter, which was rather a low fuffering time. Here we met with our friend Zachariah Dicks from North Carolina, who was come over on a religious visit to this land, and who was in some expectation of our companion G. Djoining him; but not feeling released one from another in the fervice wherein we were joined, it was judged most prudent to wait for the openings of truth, as much in our feparation, as we had endeavoured to attend to them in joining. We left E 2 this

* The following is extracted from a letter bearing date the 1st of 9th month, 1785. "Such is the state of our fociety in these parts, as well as in divers places in our land, that it is hard dragging along for poor travellers; the prevailing death is ready to swallow them up, and so put a stop to all circulation of life. Well! drooping as our spirits often are, we have no where else to go but to the fountain, which is, at times, when faith and patience are at the lowest ebb, unexpectedly opened for our ienewed refreshment, and encouragement to trust a little longer. Here are, notwithstanding, in the North of this nation where we have been, a few beautiful plants amongst the young and younger men, whose roots are, I trust, deepening in the heavenly foil; but in the prospect of their future trials, if they are faithful, I am almost ready to tremble, there is such a host of opposition for them to press through, in reviving the purity of the gospel. We are nearly united to them, and to find them was like meeting with near kindred.

this province pretty directly after the quarterly meeting, and fet off towards Dublin, taking Rathfriland meeting in our way, to which many town's people came, and it was a large and favoured meeting. We reached Dublin the 15th of 9th month, where we staid near a week, and fat feveral meetings, under great oppression and discouragement of mind, and without much relief faw an opening to leave the place and go to Timahoe. Here we visited their families and had peace therein. From thence we fet off for Edenderry; and going by way of Rathangan, an opening which had been put by when we were there before, of having a publick meeting amongst the town's people, presented again; and we had cause to admire, how providentially we were cast in the way of performing such pointings of duty, as had been, more from diffidence than a rebellious mind, passed over. Here we staid over first day, and had a large crowded meeting in the evening, which was confiderably diffurbed by fome rude people in liquor, but divers were very folid, and it ended well. From Rathangan we purfued our journey to Edenderry, Tullamore, Moat, Ballimurry, Birr,* Killconnenmore, and Roscrea; in all which a degree of painful exercise was our lot, under the feeling fense of the general departure of the professors of truth, from that ancient, righteous zeal and primitive fimplicity, which the

^{*} From this place, the writes as follows: "Gloomy is the prospect that opens in many places, and yet, by getting low enough, we sometimes find to our refreshment, that there is in most places, a hidden suffering seed, with which we have sympathized, and in the extendings of renewed strength, been led to visit, though it is but little known or valued by the easy carnally minded professor; and I have sometimes thought, that if our coming answers no other people of God who walked faithfully before Him, were, in all ages, confpicuous for. But He who never faid to the wreftling feed of Jacob, "feek ye my face in vain," graciously condescended to reward the travail of our spirits, by arising for His own name's fake, and giving strength to lift the standard of righteousness, and furnishing with an invitation to the youth to repair to it, and so inherit the blessed effects thereof.

We went to Limerick from Roscrea, and staid there over first and second days. The publick meetings were low, diffreffing opportunities, and little ability to labour amongst that people, who seem much under the influence of the god of this world: but on first day evening, a number of youth being present at T. M's and a few honest-hearted friends more advanced in years, we had a very favoured feason of retirement, and the streams of love and life, through instructive, consolating ministry, ran freely. On third day we left Limerick for Youghall; my mind was dipped into a fense of my own weakness, and great discouragement and dismay furrounded me. I faw the necessity of an increasing labour to dwell near the pure gift in myfelf, which I have ever found to be the most effectual preservation, in the conflicting work of purification and faithfulness in more publick service; for when it reduces the mind, and brings it down as into the bottom of Jordan, it likewife stays the billows thereof by pure faith, and fuccours by the incomes end than to strengthen a few, weak hands, and be instrumental in reviving the hope of the humble, tried children in the family, it will be enough, though the reward to ourfelves may be but small." of patience, whereby every divine dispensation is rendered profitable, and every bitter thing fweet; centring us out of the reach of fleshy confidence, in that state of abasedness to which divine compasfion is most eminently extended. We lodged one night at an inn, and on fourth day reached Youghall, where, on fifth, we had two large and favoured meetings. Next day we got to Springmount near Cork, to the house of our dear and honourable friend S. N. Here I heard of the decease of our beloved friend Robert Walker, who departed this life at Tottenham, near London, after having paid an acceptable religious vifit to friends of that city and its neighbourhood. He was a man who having passed through deep baptisms of spirit, in preparation for the work of the ministry, became eminent therein. The multitude could not judge, neither did they know, his frequent, fuffering descendings with the feed, when crucified in the hearts of the people, as in the streets of spiritual Sodom and Egypt; and confidering himfelf as an unworthy minister thereto, he was clothed with resignation to the difpensation of the day. Great was his industry, and yet many were the trials of his faith for the fupply of temporal things. Though unadorned with human literature, he was instructed in the school of Christ, as a good Scribe to whom was committed the knowledge of the mysteries of the kingdom, wherein all neceffary accomplishments where acquired, and displayed in gospel simplicity.

E 3 cf

Since my coming into this Province, the fubject which has for fome time been under my confideration, of fettling in these parts, has often presented to my mind; with an anxious defire, that the most endeared companion of my life, may, with myfelf, be kept fingle in all our views, and refigned in our spirits to whatever infinite wisdom sees meet to do with us; that the way before us, though it be strait and narrow, may not be made more difficult, by any willings and runnings of our own. I am often afraid of myself in this respect; I feel, when unsupported by best help, a partial attachment to my native land; and to part with my connections, and fome to whom I am closely united in spirit, at times appears hard: but even on this footing, I find a counterpoifing weight on my hufband's fide, who has also valuable relations, and many friends in the best sense, with temporal concerns and conveniencies more fuitable than elfewhere. Oh then, may divine counsel influence our spirits, in the consideration, and determination of this important step! Thou knowest, O Lord! the fervency and exercise of my spirit herein; thou knowest, that, above all things I wish to ferve thee, with the dedication of all that I have, when thou callest for it; and as by thy power only, an holy compliance is wrought; O withhold it not in the needful time! Suffer not our feet to flide from the ancient foundation, but with the right arm of thy strength, enable us to make war in righteousness, in the lot thou affignest! O shew us the lot! Suffer us not to wander in the dark, but be thou graciously pleased spiritually to lead us, by the cloud and pillar of fire, certain tokens of thy holy approbation of the way that we take!

At Cork we staid, (except going one day to Bandon, and returning the next) eleven days, and attended nine meetings, and many private opportunities in friend's families, where counsel and encouragement often unexpectedly opened; which were ministered under the precious influence of divine love and life; wherein the spirits of a remnant were cemented together, in a degree of holy sellowship, and an exercise generally prevailed to help one another forward in the new and living way; which in many places lies much unoccupied, the travellers having got into paths so widely different, that it is sometimes difficult to find it; and when found, so to believe in its rectitude, as to make straight steps therein.

During my stay in and about Cork, I had frequent occasions humbly to commemorate the wifdom, mercy, and power, of our gracious Helper, who, in a time of deep humiliation and adversity, fustained my poor tossed foul; and, by a portion of that holy faith, which I knew to be his own immediate gift, gave me to fee his all-fufficiency, and my own nothingness; and after melting all that was within me, by his humbling difpensations, faw meet again to renew his image upon my heart, and to cause me to experience more largely the work of the new creation, and the necessity of ever abiding in lowliness of mind, and treading the courts of the Lord with holiness and fear. O! faid my foul, withhold not from me whatever hath this tendency; let the voice of the Holy One go forth, which faith, " cut down the tree," rather than it should overspread, and bring forth fruit, to dishonour the great and excellent cellent Name: nevertheless, may that which is pure be fastened, as with a band of iron in the tender grass of the field, that so, humility and simplicity may spring, and more loudly acknowledge, that the Most High reigns in the kingdoms of men, and giveth of his own precious gifts and favours to whomsoever he will.

We went from Cork to the house of a friend who, for fome months past, has been in a low dejected state of mind; and in the evening my dear companion R. J. was dipped into his fituation, and her mouth was opened in living counsel and encouragement, which for a time feemed to revive him. Here I met with my dear husband, to our mutual confolation; and from hence, after attending a meeting next day at Garryroan, which was rather a low time, we went to Clonmel to our mother's there, and rested one day before the quarterly meeting for Munster province came on. Our minds were measurably baptized for the approaching folemnity, particularly that of my beloved friend R. J. who with dear G. D. had good fervice; and the meetings, though laborious, were eminently owned with the extension of divine good, and friends were renewedly encouraged to faithfulness in their refpective lots. I fat all the meetings filently, not without a fellow-feeling and travail with those engaged in turning the battle to the gate; but my fpirit was fo clothed with the garment of mourning, and the fense of my own infusficiency, that I was ready to fay, with the Prophet, "I will speak no more in Thy Name." Yet to be preferved in a state of patient exercise, and in resignation to what might be the allotted portion of fuffering in this day of trial, was the fervent defire of my mind. In this frame, I have often known the most fensible incomes of holy help, and been more enabled from thence to bring up stones of memorial, than when the travail of my foul has been more fhallow, and the streams of the ministry have lain nearer the furface of the people's spirits; and O! that, in all feafons of proving, I may never thrink from under that mournful covering, till the fense of what I am, and a degree of living faith in the immediate teachings of divine wildom, are not only raised, but prevail in my heart; that fo, the creature, its wisdom and activity, may die daily, under that Power which crucifies all that is of the flesh, and fanctifies throughout. After the quarterly meeting was over, we were most easy to sit with the friends of that particular meeting; where I felt an openness for some religious communication; and it was a close, but favoured time; nevertheless a degree of fadness remained with me. After this meeting was over, and partaking of a cup of heavenly confolation in the family of a relation, we went down to Anner Mills that night, and next day fet off for Dublin, in order to attend the half year's meeting, held in the eleventh month. It was rather a low time, but holy help was near (according to ancient declaration) to the Poor in Spirit, the exercifed wreftling feed, of which, through preferving goodness, there is a remnant in this land; with whose tribulated path I have often been dipped into near fympathy, and was renewedly fo at this time: nevertheless, we had unitedly to believe, that if some of these persisted in unfaithfulness to the manifestations of duty, concerning their religious fervices, they were in danger of occafioning direct

casioning to themselves such a wilderness travel, as might prove very difficult for them to be delivered from. These were fervently and honestly laboured with, "to offer to the Lord the facrifice of thankfgiving, and to pay all their vows;" that fo, a generation might be raifed up more zealous for the honour and promulgation of the great Name, than many of later times have been. My mind was greatly depressed in this city, and I found it conduce to my fafety, to weigh well what I apprehended to be the motions of truth. The meetings were large, and my beloved companions being not only better qualified for fervice therein, but coming from so distant a part of the world as Pennfylvania in America, and there being little or no prospect of their ever having another opportunity, of fo fully relieving their minds to friends in this land, I fought for obscurity: which is always most defirable to my own mind, knowing that fafety attends it; and that it requires deep baptifins, and a close dwelling with the gift, rightly to minister life, and visit the feed in large mixed congregations. Without an extraordinary degree of these, it feldom happens that the appearances of those who are young in experience, afford fatisfaction to the true church of Christ, or that they reap the reward of folid instructive peace in their own minds; and often feeling that I am one of thefe, the prayer of my spirit has been, that I may be kept under the humbling fense thereof, and be preserved from burdening the living by being too shallow in my spirit, or spreading too much into fruitless branches; that so, the great and excellent cause of truth may never be dishonoured by or through me. Infinite wisdom is, nevertheless, to direct and go before us, in the line of His own appointment: and under an apprehension of the puttings forth of the heavenly Shepherd, I ventured to step forward in two large meetings; and through his fustaining goodness, I was enabled to relieve my own mind in a good degree; for which with many gracious affistances, from time to time difpenfed, may my foul bow in humble gratitude and awful fear, through the continued stages of my tried pilgrimage. My dear friends R. J. and G. D. had great and good fervice in the course of these meetings; and R. J. feeling an engagement to have a meeting with the women friends, (none being held for discipline for them at that season of the year) after laying it before friends, it was cheerfully complied with, and a folid profitable meeting it proved. R. J. and myfelf, feeling fomething more than a freedom to fit with a committee of men friends, appointed by the national meeting to confider the ftate of fociety, and complying with it, we were enabled to feel with friends thereon, and to lay down our refpective burdens. The evening preceding our leaving the city, and after the meetings were over, many friends being collected at our lodgings, we had a refreshing, inftructive, opportunity of retirement; wherein counsel and encouragement were ministered, and friends parted under a living fense of the extension of divine favour to His church and family. Next day we went to Baltiboys, a very poor fmall meeting; after which we proceeded about five miles further, intending next morning to fet off for Mountmellick; but when all was ready for our departure, a hefitation sprang, and spread, respecting the propriety of our pursuing the intended plan; plan; and the more it was looked at, the more clearly it appeared best to sit with the few friends felect, there having been many not of our profeffion at meeting the day before. One of our guides, therefore, kindly undertook to collect the members of that meeting together; which was done, and we had no cause to repent our stay, but were rather encouraged to trust in future to the turnings of the spiritual guide, who requires that we should be followers, and not leaders, if we purfue the path of true peace. Instead of going to Mountmellick from Baltiboys, we went to Ballitore that night, and next day to Athy meeting; then to Mountmellick, Montrath, Knockballymaher, Ballynakill, and to Carlow to the quarterly meeting for Leinster Province held there. It was a remarkably low time, and the minds of many were baptized into a feeling fense of the coolness and indifferency, that prevails amongst the professors of truth in these parts, and filent sadness was much our lot. Intending from hence for Waterford, and the counties of Wexford and Wicklow, we first paid a visit to the little meeting at Castledermot; it was finall, but divine goodness was near. My mind, in time of filence, was comfortably gathered from some buffetings, doubtings and difmay; and the language of the apostle sweetly passed through, and fettled me in an humble confidence and calm; be patient, establish your hearts, for the day of the Lord draweth nigh. We returned to Carlow and next day attended their week-day meeting; after which we went to Ballydarton belonging to Kilconner meeting, which I was prevented from attending by a pain in my head and teeth; but was enabled to proceed with my companions to Rofs next day, where growing worse, they were under the necessity of leaving me, after they had fat with the few friends there, in order to attend the first day meetings at Waterford; where my husband and divers of our relations from Clonmel came to meet us. My R. G. came to me, and was a truly acceptable guest, my mind having funk, and my ftrength feeming to be exhausted with the pain. I was so much relieved as to be able to go next day to Waterford, to rejoin my beloved friends R. J. and G. D. whose company and fervices have been, through the course of this journey, instructive and strengthening to my often doubting mind. When through the descending of heavenly virtue, my spirit has been cemented with theirs, and in the unity and covenant of life, an harmonious exercise has prevailed in me, either in publick or in fecret, I have had renewedly to admire the gracious condescension of our holy Head and High Priest, in anointing, in any degree, for a work fo great and awful, and leading into this excellent fellowship. At Waterford we staid their week day meeting on third day, which was a favoured time; and after having likewise divers comfortable religious opportunities with friends of that place, (there being a quickened remnant growing in the spiritual life) we took leave of them under a precious sense of divine superintending care, and went to Forest, Cooladine, Randal's Mills, Ballinclay, Ballicane and Wicklow; and found an honest-hearted set of friends, who are preserved in a good degree of confistency with the principles we profess: yet there are others who widely differ in this respect. Our kind friend J. W. having met us at Ballicane, we went in company with him to Dublin on the feventh day of the week, and next day attended their meetings in Meath-street and Sycamore-alley; at both which my companions were filent. My mind was deeply exercifed in them, and as I perceived fome little opening for publick labour, I gave up thereto under many discouraging impressions; in part the effects of a reasoning disposition, and unprofitably ruminating on the repeated labours of more qualified instruments, and the unsuccessfulness of many of them; and in part, I trust, of a right and neceffary jealoufy over myself, lest I should be the means of conveying a lifeless multiplicity of words, or be found feeding the people, when the divine word might proclaim a fast. But it awfully sprang in my mind, that if ever fo fmall a warning was given me to deliver, and I concealed it, the blood of those for whom it was intended might, according to the declaration of the Most High to the Prophet, be required at my hands. As this visit to the nation was closing, a fecret prayer was begotten in me, that we might be enabled, as faithfully and willingly to finish the work, as, through humbling operations, we were refigned to begin it; which, to the praise of His grace who puts forth and goes before His own sheep, we were strengthened to do, and had afresh to discover that His ways are not as our ways, nor His thoughts as our thoughts. When we apprehended ourselves at liberty to fail from that city, and had agreed with a captain bound for Whitehaven for our passage there, the wind proved contrary, and we found it fafe to look around us, that if any little fervice was omitted, it might then be performed. This we were ready to think was not much the case, having attended their men's and women's meetings on third day, where, through divine ability graciously afforded, we had a close, fearching, and humbling feafon: but now flanding in the refignation, not being detained of ourselves, divers opportunities for publick and private labour unexpectedly opened, generally tending to invite the ignorant, and to encourage the fincere and drooping minds to a faith in the fufficiency of the gift of God in themselves, for the fanctification of the foul, and the necessary supply of every spiritual enjoyment, and qualification acceptably to worship; which must now, as formerly, be fought for, in the beauty of holiness, and in newness of life. The wind proving contrary, we staid over another first day, when my companions G. D. and R. J. were enabled to bring up living stones of memorial, to the sealing I trust of their testimony on the spirits of many; and my cup of affectionate fellowship seemed to overflow in fecret. The next day a gale rose in our favour, which we thankfully accepted, and were gently wafted over by it in twenty-five hours, having had as pleafant a voyage as we could wish for, fickness excepted; and for the holy directing and protecting power of immortal goodness, we were gratefully humbled. We staid one night at Whitehaven after our landing, and next day attended their week day meeting, which was a low time. Soon after it closed, we fet off for Greyfouthen, where R. J. and I staid that night. Our much loved friend and companion G. D. and his wife (who had been with us ever fince we were at Cooladine) finding it conduce most to their peace to ftay the quarterly meeting for Cumberland, to be held the week after; and we having a prospect of attending the quarterly meeting for the county of York, to be held at Leeds; we found the time for our separation was come; and had to commemorate the kindness of infinite wisdom, in so casting us together, and cementing us, according to our measures, in the hidden life. Here we took an affecting and affectionate farewell of each other.

held

We stopped at Cockermouth in our way to Kendal, and fpent a few hours very agreeably with our friends J. and B. D. and their children; and before we left them, the fpring of heavenly confolation arose, and refreshed both visitors and visited; and with grateful hearts we fet off, and reached Kefwick that night; and next day, having a pleafant ride among the mountains, we were favoured in good time to get to Kendal, where my dear companion had an opportunity of vifiting J. and R. W.'s children, who, fince she was there before, had loft their honourable father, and it was a humbling favoured opportunity. Finding ourselves at liberty to leave that place, and R. J. having passed by Wray and Bentham meetings when she was that way before, and now feeling a draft towards them, we went next day, the twenty-fourth of the twelfth month, to Wray, and in the evening had a good meeting with the few friends there, and some others who came in. Next morning we went to Bentham meeting, which was an exercifing time, but ended in awful supplication, wherein my beloved companion was publickly engaged. Having an evening meeting appointed at Settle, we reached there in time, and it proved a folid, instructive, season.

From

From thence on fecond day, the twenty-fixth, we got to Leeds, and there met with my dear father and mother, to our mutual fatisfaction. The quarterly meeting came on next day, and held till the evening of the twenty-ninth. Through the feveral fittings thereof, I had undoubtedly to believe that my companion was in her right place; and was thankful, under the confideration that we were there in better wisdom than our own, and were found worthy to bear a share in the weight of sufferings, which generally attend these large affemblies. Rebecca Jones being disposed to spend a little time in rest with our mutual friend C. H. we parted after our quarterly meeting, and I came homewards, with a desire rightly to feel my way, whether to continue a while longer with this my endeared friend, in her religious service, or to give up and furrender my certificate: for though I had a prospect, when I left home, of visiting the western part of this nation, to which my certificate was also addressed, yet if the commission should close fooner than I looked for, my compliance therewith appears as neceffary, as it would be if it should extend further; feeing that the virtue of all our religious movements consists in the divine putting forth, and the continuation of holy anointing; which we have abundant cause to acknowledge, is not at our command.

C H A P. IV.

Account of her Visit to some of the western Counties of England.

FEW months after her return from Ireland, the felt a renewed engagement to accompany her friend R. Jones, on a vifit to fome parts of the western counties in England. Of the principal parts of this visit, she has left the following journal.

After my return from Ireland, my beloved companion R. J. being detained in Yorkshire, on divers accounts, for three months, I was thereby fet at liberty to adjust some family concerns at home, and pay some visits to neighbouring meetings, as truth appeared to open the way; especially to Whitby, Scarborough, Bridlington, Hornsea, and Hull; in the course of which my mind was, in the needful time, mercifully supported with renewed supplies of holy help, though, in general, in a low and ftripped state; fearing lest, in the exercise of the gift, a zeal which is not according to true knowledge, nor originating in that baptifm of fpirit wherein the creature is humbled, should so mix with the divine openings, as to carry away the feet of the mind from that fafe standing in the deeps, which is justly compared to the bottom of Jordan. Here, it is necessary for true gospel ministers, steadily to abide, with the weight of the service they are engaged in upon their shoulders, till the spirits of the assembled are, in some degree, attracted to the promised land, the new heaven and the new earth, wherein dwelleth the righteousness of faith, and where spiritual worship is rightly performed, in the beauty of holiness and newness of life. To be instrumental in the divine hand of thus, in any measure, converting the spirits of those to whom we may be led to minister, requires an unction altogether unmixed; but when revolt, backfliding, and a superficial fpirit, have been necessarily unveiled, I have, sometimes, diffreffingly found, that fome of my armour was carnal; and O! how hath all that was within me been humbled at the discovery, that the Lord's righteous controversy with the works of darkness, had not been righteously upheld, nor the door of escape therefrom wisely opened. An increase of experience convinces me, that preaching is a mystery which every one exercifed therein, has need to be often industriously, and impartially learning, as far as concerns themselves; and where this is the case, I am abundantly perfuaded, that our dependance must be drawn from the sentiments of those friends to whose judgment we are most attached, in order rightly to diftinguish betwixt the unity of the one infallible spirit, and their partiality to us, and to be weighed in the just balance of the fanctuary, where we are fometimes found defective, even when all around us speak peace.

"My dear husband accompanied me in this little round: his fympathizing mind, and care for my preservation every way, was truly strengthening, and afforded frequent occasions of humble thankfulness to the Author of all good, who had so bountifully provided for me, both in spiritual and temporal things. After our return home we gave up housekeeping, not with a conclusion that we should remove from England, but under an apprehension that it was right to take that step, as the way opened for my being again united in service with my beloved companion R. J. and my husband had no profpect of being fettled during my absence. We therefore removed our furniture, and ourselves to York, the quarterly meeting there being at hand; after which, the 1st of 4th month, 1786, I went to Ackworth to meet my companion, who had gone there the day before. We staid there on first day, and found fome close and necessary labour, not only in publick, but in private opportunities, amongst the masters, mistresses, and servants, severally; for the Enemy of all good hath proved himself bufy, in endeavouring to fow his tares amongst the good feed in that institution and family; and unless those on whom the weight and care of it most devolves, keep in view the necessity of attending more to the holy Oracle in their movements, than to the strength of their own wifdom and understanding, it will lose the lustre that truth would put upon it, and become the nurfery of a worldly spirit, though disguised with an appearance of religious form. There is in that family a fuffering, wreftling feed, an exercifed remnant, which though fmall, is a means, under the divine bleffing, of keeping open the fpring of life; and if fuch keep their places, there is reason to hope that more will be added to their number, and, through the influence of their example, the truth, in its own fimplicity, gain ground, instead of the difguifed spirit of error. A falutation of love flowed to fuch, under a fense whereof we left them, fave our worthy friend W.S. who went with us to Wakefield, where divers are under convincement, and fome of them appear to be rightly fo. Here we had an open, instructive opportunity; and from thence went to Bradford, and next day proceeded to Manchester, where we attended their week-day meeting; in which my companion was greatly favoured to dip into the state of the seed, and profitably to vifit it, and filence was I believe rightly my lot. From Manchester we went to Stockport, Macclesfield, Morley, and fo to Warrington, to the monthly meeting there; where again I thought my companion had eminent fervice, and close fearching labour, wherewith I felt a fpiritual travail, and fympathetic mourning over the great carnality, and departure from the way of peace, which greatly prevail in that, and the neighbouring places. Though there is a peculiar people, and a royal priefthood, in that monthly meeting, yet as the number in a very different spirit, is great, the pure life is prevented from circulating, and purifying the temple. So that the prospect, amongst the youth especially, is exceedingly discouraging; diffipation, or the gilded corruptions of human nature, having possession, and, like the strong man armed, keeping the house and all the goods thereof in peace: and until a stronger than he, by the spirit of judgment and of burning, dislodges him of his hold, casts him out, and spoils all his goods, there is but little room to expect fuch to demonstrate unto others, by the liveliness of their spirits, the circumspection of their conduct, and a rightly feafoned conversation, that they are acquainted with the efficacious virtue of true religion. From Warrington, my husband returned to Yorkshire, in company with William Rotch of Nantucket, and we back into Cheshire. It was rather a gloomy parting to me, being very unwell with a rheumatic complaint in my head, and more depref-

fed

fed in mind than I was free to express to any; which is often the case with me, when under a fense of the awfulness of the work I am embarked in, of the little effect it has on the minds of many, and of my own exceeding great weakness, and apparent unfitness for engaging with facred things; fo that my way oft feems to lie by the valley and shadow of death; where I feel myself subject to fearful apprehensions, and a deep and gloomy exercise. Nevertheless, to the praise of the divine grace, my foul can thankfully and humbly acknowledge that, through what appeared the smallest grain of faith, preservation hath been experienced, and strength to ascend, in the Lord's time, that holy mountain where nothing can hurt or destroy; because the creature, and its attendant evils are subjected, and access to the feast of fat things, and of wine well refined, is graciously afforded, to the renewed support of the drooping mind, which was ready, but a little before, to cast away its confidence, and say, "the Lord hath forgotten me." Thus, as by a tender father, are we dealt with, under those proving difpenfations, which are effentially necessary for carrying forward the work of fanctification in the foul, and a preparation to receive the infcription of, " Holiness unto the Lord." When I consider the necessity hereof, a fear, on the other hand, often arises lest it should be partially or superficially effected; and a fervent craving of spirit, that the refining operations of the Holy Ghost and Fire, may so perform their affigned office, as that every specious appearance of felf-love may be confumed, and the fpring of action, in the performance of both religious and moral duties, rendered pure. Thus varioufly. oufly, is the attention of the travailing foul turned; and if the pure discoveries of truth are but the object singly fought for, He who created light out of darkness, and hath sown it for the righteous, doth, in times of our greatest extremity reveal himself to be the Lord Almighty. From Warrington we went to Sutton, Franley, Newton, Chester, Nantwich, and Middlewich, when our visit to Cheshire seemed ended, where, as in other places, we had to view, and mourn over, the desolation which hath prevailed amongst the professor of truth; so that the Heathen may query, "Where is their God?"

Our next stage was to Leek, and so to Colebrook Dale; we had meetings both at the New and Old Dale, which were favoured, ftrengthening feafons; by ability being graciously afforded and accepted, to fink down deep into fuffering with the precious feed; and a little exercifed remnant were found wrestling in spirit for the divine blessing, who were visited in the renewings of life, and instructive counsel flowed towards them. Divers of the younger fort amongst them, have been visited by affliction; the day of the Lord hath come upon all that was lifted up, and the projects, like the ships of Tarshish, which were intended to go to fetch gold, have been broken early in their fetting out, as at Eziongeber, and all their pleafant pictures spoiled; which have evidently been permitted in mercy, that their affections might be loofened from things transient and perishing; and, instead thereof, durable riches and righteousness become their inheritance. But as this work is great and glorious, and cannot be effected, fave by the humbling processes of the work of fanctification in the foul, a deep engagement engagement dwelt upon my mind, that those in whom this work is begun, may be preserved from flinching under it, or taking themselves, or one another, as out of the furnace, before it effect the great end for which it was prepared; and, that being redeemed from the superficies of religious experience, to an entire dependance on the holy purifying fpring of immortal life, they may approve themselves the humble followers of Christ; and, through the efficacy of his own spirit, be qualified to advocate the cause of truth and righteousness. From hence we went to Shrewsbury, and were at two meetings there on first day, which were favoured opportunities; the latter was publick, and a great many of the town's people attended. There are fome vifited young people in this place, and a profpect of a revival comfortably affected our minds. It was here to be determined whether we should turn towards Worcestershire, Herefordshire, &c. or into Wales, which was occasion of deep inquiry to find out the good and acceptable way; and as our minds were fingle herein, we were favoured to unite in the conclusion, that it was better now to turn into Wales, a step we had no reason to repent on any account, finding a peaceful ferenity attending our minds through the course of a folitary travel therein; and such a supply of strength to dip into, and visit the feed in those parts, as was cause of humble thankfulness to the Author of every good and spiritual gift. His eye perceives the most obscure parts of his own creation, and graciously compassionates His humble suppliant children, who, under a fense of their own wants, are cafting all their care upon him, and looking fingly to his bountiful hand for food convenient for them, both spiritual and temporal, in preference to the luxurious enjoyment of transitory things; desiring that bleffing which makes truly rich, and whereunto no deadly forrow is added. We were comforted in finding a number of this fort in Wales, particularly at Tuthynigarrig and Llanidloes; though, at the former, among divers of their members, a worldly spirit and lukewarmness about the best things prevail. We were also at Eskergoch, a very poor defolate place every way; but some folid people not professing with us, attending the meeting, were a help to it; and my beloved companion was drawn in the language of confolation to vifit fome of thefe, who were as sheep wandering upon the mountains, and panting after a shepherd. It was from this place we went to Llanidloes, where we had a large publick meeting, and from thence to Rayadar, a place where there are no friends, but where we had fatisfactory meeting among the town's people, in one of the rooms of the inn; and after it went to Pales, and were at meeting there next day, which was a laborious, fearching opportunity, many diforderly walkers being there. We then stept out of Wales, and vifited the few friends at Almilly and Leominster, in Herefordshire. The first is very fmall, having scarce any weight to support a meeting; but many folid neighbours attending, it was a precious lively opportunity, and my spirit was humbled, and awfully reverenced the condefcending goodness of our Almighty Helper, whose loving kindness is better than life, and the lifting up of the light of his countenance, than great riches. The meeting at Leominster was low and trying. We went from hence to Troy near Monmouth in South Wales: here we lodged one night, and next morning fet off for Pontipool to the quarterly meeting, which was to be held there the first day following. Our dear and much valued friends, T. Corbyn, H. Wilkins and T. H. overtook us upon the road; we were mutually glad to fee each other, and also to feel each others spirits in the meetings we attended together at Pontipool and Cardiff, whither we went (after the quarterly meeting was ended) to attend the Welch yearly meeting there. My mind, on drawing near to that place, was awfully affected, in a renewed fense of the important station of a gospel minister, which, the more my understanding is opened, the more I perceive it to call for a watchful care to keep in the station, and to preferve it unblameable, by endeavouring to dwell low enough with the gift, fo as rightly to distinguish between a filent union with the feed in meetings, (wherein we fometimes fympathize with the concerns of others,) and our own publick fervice for the cause. And I was thankful in feeling my spirit humbly contrited, under a sense of my own weakness, and the commemoration of infinite kindness in times past; and I secretly supplicated that the approaching folemnity might be graciously owned with the virtue of divine life, immediately imparted from the great Minister of ministers; whereby I felt, in a good degree, strengthened for my own measure of exercise, which proved altogether in filence. But this was not the case with some others; with a few of whom a fense of near unity attended my spirit, both in a fecret travail of spirit, and in the exercise of their F 2 gifts;

gifts; never that I remember, being fo fensible of the purity of that life which, and which only, quickens services in the church, and qualifies the centred mind, to judge righteously concerning publick offerings in meetings. Whatever has a tendency to close up the fpring of this life, by casting rubbish thereinto, instead of industriously removing it, such as the shallow, superficial judgment of the natural mind, its old experiences and wifdom, which are held out of the life, can never availingly invite the wrestling soul, that is panting after the pure milk of the divine word, to the fountain of spiritual confolation, or refresh the christian pilgrim in his journey heaven-wards. O the purity of that life which is hid with Christ in God! It cannot be supported but by the flesh and blood, the virtue or divine nature of the Son; nor can it unite with that which is not congenial to itself. There is a ministry which, like the whirlwind, the earthquake, and the fire, makes apparent effects upon nature, thakes it, throws it into confusion, and kindles it with untempered zeal; but proves very deficient in fettling it upon the fure foundation; or introducing it into that rest which is prepared for the people of God, who cease from all their own works; or teaching it to diffinguish between the voice of the Shepherd, and the voice of the stranger. Hence, many, otherwife well disposed minds, have got bewildered, their attention diverted from the one great Object, and fixed upon facrifices of their own; which, in time, are so depended upon for righteousness, that the hunger which was once begotten decreases, and the state of the church of Laodicea becomes theirs; growing rich and full, increasing increasing with goods and in need of nothing; when alas! though specious their appearance, their fituation is most wretched, and, in the light of truth, they are discovered to stand in need of every thing. Under these considerations, my mind is often instructed in the necessity of confiding only in the Spring of life itself, and approving nothing as religious, but what comes from it, or is under its preparing, fanctifying power: and for this end, it is necessary to be very watchful over the activity of felf, that the spirits may be tried, and my faith proved, whether it is grounded and established upon the right foundation, or is of that fort that wavers and floats upon any imaginary presentation, whereby I may be rendered of those who are not to expect any thing at the hand of God, James, i. 6, 7. There are so many ways for the mind, when it is off its guard, to be enfoared either into fensible darkness, or a righteousness of its own, which is worst of all, that, when clothed with a fense of my infirmity and weakness, I mourn in spirit; and am thankful when, in a grain of unadulterated faith, I can fav, " if thou wilt, thou canst " make me clean," and breathe for the bleffing of preservation. From a fear of being instrumental in fettling down young people especially, in the form of godliness without the power; and urging them to an appearance which might create felf-complacence. and reconcile them to an apprehension, that they are further advanced in the work of religion than is really the case; I have often forborne to drop such advice upon the subject of dress, among those who were inconsistent in their appearance, as, sometimes, I felt the testimony of truth to dictate; a departure from true simplicity herein being generally obvious. At large meetings particularly, where friends from distant parts are collected, there is a confiderable appearance of inconfistency in clothing and demeanour, which, with many other things, indicate a love of the world, and a fellowship with its spirit; but though a regulation herein is only a small part of the fruit of the good Tree, yet it is as affuredly a part, as the more striking constituents of a christian. "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin," is a comprehensive truth, which neither approves an inconfistent, nor a plausible appearance and conduct, merely as fuch; but wholly condemns every part of our lives which is not governed by the redeeming Spirit of truth, wherein our faith should stand: fo that, to attain this state, to live under the righteous control of divine monition, is I apprehend to be a follower of Christ, under whose spiritual baptism the precious is separated from the vile, and by whose fan, the chaff, to which the vanities of this life may be compared, will flee, and leave the wheat, for divine protection, in the heavenly garner. Feeling my mind drawn to a little folid conversation with a young woman, to whom I had felt near unity, and whom I believed to be under the preparing hand for fervice, but diffident in spirit, and a suitable opportunity offering, I accepted it; wherein I dropped a little matter by way of encouragement to her, in her filent steppings and hidden exercises; taking occasion to observe, that as she had hitherto been preserved, in a good measure, independant of human confolations, fo I wished her to continue, believing that the arm of omnipotence was most eminently revealed to us in this state of singleness, under such fpiritual fpiritual provings and conflicts as are effentially necessary for fanctification. It was a time of mutual comfort, and I was thankful that I gave up to it.

At Cardiff we met again our beloved brother G. D. which both he and we rejoiced at. He was much favoured in feveral of the meetings especially the publick ones, which were large; but my dear companion had not much openness for publick labour, till the last opportunity with friends felect; when she was strengthened to visit the members of our fociety in a memorable manner; which with fome, will I trust be as a nail fastened in a fure place. In our way from Cardiff to Briftol, to which we were bound, we stopped at Newport to breakfast, where my companion and G. D. felt an inclination to have a publick meeting, which was readily complied with, and held in a room in the inn; many came to it, and it was a favoured opportunity. We then proceeded on our journey, croffed what is called the new passage, and reached Bristol late that night. We met with a hospitable reception from Lydia Hawksworth, with whom we sojourned, and next day I went with my companion and Lydia, to fee our beloved, honoured friend C. Phillips, then at J. Hipfley's at Congersbury. She was in a languid state of health, which in some degree occasioned a depression of spirits, but her best life was strong, though hid from herself with Christ in God. She hath been a faithful, laborious fervant in the church, especially under the exercife of her gift, which was eminent for its purity, its copiousness, and clearness; distinguishing the good and evil trees by representing their fruits in their true light. Her ministry had a tendency, to raise into dominion the pure life, and in supplication she hath been often wonderfully favoured with near accefs, and enabled to cast down every crown, and to ascribe worship and praise, salvation and strength, to the Lord God and the Lamb. Since my mind has been graciously visited with a fense of truth, such hath been my sentiment concerning this great and good woman: but about two years ago, to my humble admiration, in a feafon of great proving of spirit, it was so renewed and fealed to me, the inward attraction fo ftrong, and the evidence that she was a faithful follower of the Lamb, fo undoubted, (a language fweetly flowing through my mind, "I have chosen her and fhe is mine") that I not only rejoiced, and was strengthened, but saw the abundant superiority of the unfoldings of truth, to all the prepoffession we can receive from the experience of others; my want of an outward acquaintance with her being thus amply supplied by the gracious condescension of the Head of the church, who wifely and mysterioufly unites together the large and finall members of His body, and, by fuch connection, makes them more useful to each other than they know or can of themselves conceive. Where this union and fense is thus received, I am of the belief that nothing but a departure from the divine life, wherein a christian fellowship stands, can ever alter our inward feelings towards the Lord's anointed. Though I am often difmayed at the fight of things within and without, and fince the time alluded to, have been ready to fay in mine hafte, " all men are liars;" yet it was matter of renewed confolation

and

and abasement of mind, that on being in company with our beloved friend, C. Phillips, my feelings respecting her were revived, with sweetness and rejoicing. But these were mixed with an inexpressible fympathy, and fense of the buffetings and floods of the dragon, yea, and of his temptations as in the wilderness; where, though she hungered, yet, with unconquered fortitude, nobly refisted every importunity, to command the stones to be made bread. Having fuffered with her Lord and Master, and been preferved through many temptations, my fecret belief was that life will again arise abundantly in her, and her garments, even in this state of mutability, be washed and made white in the blood of the suffering, yet victorious Lamb. And oh! how did all that was within me bow under this perfuasion, and under a fense that the disciples of Jesus have, in proportion to their strength and gifts, a measure of afflictions to fill for their own, and the body's fake, which is His church. Here my reflections on myself were exceedingly awful; I considered that I was just entering the field, unskilled in war, with the armour but newly put on, and exceedingly uncertain whether I shall not fall a prey to mine enemy. But O Lord! teach, I pray thee, mine hands to war, and my fingers to fight, even the good fight. of faith, in the fufficiency of thy power, and against every intrusion of my own; that thou, in all things mayst be glorified, and if I perish, it may be at thy footftool!

The yearly meeting at Briftol came on, and lasted three days. It afforded many opportunities for suffering, and deep gloomy exercise, to those who travailed in spirit for the arisings of life, which, nevertheless, for a short season, in divers of them, senfibly circulated; but it feems as if, for want of veffels rightly prepared, the current was often turned backward, and retired again into obscurity, where a baptized number endeavoured patiently to dwell; among whom was my beloved companion, who found but little liberty to relieve her burdened mind. The first day after the yearly meeting we were at Claverham meeting, which was a favoured instructive opportunity, and returned to Bristol to their evening meeting; at the conclusion of which, my companion had to revive the meffage fent to Hezekiah, and, with evident ftrength and clearnefs, to apply it to some there. A young man who was then in the vigour of life, was soon seized with an epidemick fever, and in a few weeks removed from this stage of mortality; and several others who took the diforder, narrowly escaped with their lives; to whom the previous admonition, to fet their houses in order, was likewise seasonable. Next day we went to Sudbury, to the quarterly meeting for Gloucester and Wilts. Here we found a great want of true zeal, and love to the cause of truth, wherein living members are united in harmonious labour, and cemented together in the covenant of life; which preferves from a disposition that would look only to felfish things, and enlarges the heart in an upright care for the prosperity of others. From Sudbury we took meetings at Bath, Wesbury, Lavington, Devizes, Marlborough, and Uxbridge, in our way to London, being favoured to get fafe there the thirty first of fifth month, which afforded us a few days to rest, before the yearly meeting began. This meeting opened, to those whose spiritual faculties were alive in the truth, a field of exercifing labour; wherein a steady, watchful care was necesfary for all to keep to their own stations and vocations, with an attentive eye to the great Master; as a busy indiscreet interference of His servants, ever interrupts the beautiful order and prosperity of His work. The felect meetings were to me, as they generally are at our yearly meetings, (though not all alike attended with life) feafons of deep instruction, which I was made humblingly fensible could not be the case, by any capacity of my own to render them fo, but by being admitted (however undefervedly) for a short time, by the Master of affemblies, into the heavenly treasury, where the faint's provision, the armour of righteousness, and the just balance of the fanctuary, are all to be found; and where, as we deeply and quietly abide, we are furnished with an unerring perception of what, among the many offerings in the visible church, proceeds from the divine repository, and what doth not; fo that individuals thus gathered, though in an obscure exercise, may say with the apostle, and which I heard revived in one of these meetings, " in every thing I am instructed." And as in the opening of spiritual things, and being favoured in some degree with a fense of truth, respecting the subjects of deliberation which come before these meetings, the natural disposition sometimes prompts us to make publick remarks confonant with our feelings; I have, thus far, found it necessary to fet a double watch upon this fide, left I should step forward unbidden to put a hand to the ark, (the real frate of which Uzza faw as well as I) and fo, like him, unavailingly availingly labour, and introduce death upon myfelf; proving unworthy of an admittance into the treafury, and of being entrusted with divine secrets, which are not to be revealed but in the divine will, and under the sensible direction of the High Priest of our profession; that the bread which we minister. being given us by Him, may also be bleffed, and that, however apparently course and insufficient, its efficacy and extensive usefulness may abound to those who are fed, and redound to His praise whose will is our fanctification. As an attentive care on this hand is necessary, I likewise perceived a danger on the other, when, in the fimplicity and nakednefs of truth, and confequently unadorned with any thing goodly in my own eyes, a right feafon has been discovered to express a few words, and through unprofitable diffidence, and undervaluing the fmallness of the appearance, I have put by these little openings to duty. This was more than once the cafe, during the fittings of the felect meetings this year, and which contributed to my own increasing weakness. So that, whilst we are desirous to keep our own hearts, and be preferved from prodigality in imparting our religious feelings, we ought also to stand refigned to the fecret intimations of truth, in order to approve ourselves good stewards of the manifold grace of God; advancing from one degree of favour, acceptance, and communion with Him, to another, and thus become established before Him as children without rebuke. The meetings for difcipline of women friends became exceedingly weighty to me, as the friend who was clerk last year declined the office, and my name was mentioned by divers divers for that fervice. I fought to object, under an awful sense of the weightiness of that station, especially in so large and newly established a meeting, and with the feebleness of my qualifications for it; but I foon felt all refistance chained down in me, and a fecret, fervent breathing begotten for that holy affistance, which I knew to be superior to every effort of my own without it: for though a degree of exertion is necessary, and the natural faculties of mind called upon to fervice, yet I faw they are no longer instrumental in helping forward the cause of truth and righteousness, than whilst they are actuated by divine love and life, and abide in the faith, without the government of which, they are no better than founding brass, and a tinkling cymbal. Under this humbling perfuasion, I took my feat, having E. T. and S. D. to affift; and the bufiness of the meeting opened, which proved, in the feveral fucceeding fittings, a profitable fervice, introducing women friends, more generally than heretofore, into an exercise on their own, their families, and the church's account; for want of which, great declenfion from the virtue of true religion, and the fimplicity it leads into, has long lamentably fpread among us as a people. And fince, in the turnings and overturnings of the great Controller of events, a women's yearly meeting is established, and for these two last years hath been regularly opened in correspondence with the several quarterly meetings, in order more deeply to enter into the state of fociety, as it is feen in the truth, a necessity was evidently discovered from meeting to meeting, for friends to encrease their acquaintance with the light, which only makes manifest, and without which our judgment judgment is exceedingly imperfect; and when this is obtained, not only to work in it, but to work wifely in it, endeavouring to suppress a disposition which is not purely intent upon reaching the witness in each other, even when under the necessity of humblingly displaying that christian virtue, of rendering good for evil, and of being willing to endure all things. Christian condescension is one of the great wheels whereby the cause of truth is advanced, among rightly exercifed members, in meetings for discipline. When a burden rests on the mind of any, which in fimplicity is removed, it adds greatly to its value, and recommends it to those to whom it is offered, when submitted in the spirit of true meeknefs, and no inclination discovered to urge that out of the truth, which at first was delivered with the favour of it; even though it may feem to undergo perfecution, by that wisdom in others which is from beneath, and is carnal; for a bleffing belongs to those who rightly endure persecution, and being reviled, revile not again.

meeting

To difcriminate between our own spirits, and a right zeal when contending for the faith, requires great singleness of heart, and openness to self-conviction, which I have forrowfully observed too sew arrive at, or dwell in; and hence we are deprived of an increase in the increase of God, the fruit-bearing branches not being so effectually purged, as to enable them to bring forth more good fruit.

—O the beauty of the living branches, when they abide in the vine, draw their sap from the root, and retain only an holy emulation with each other! a preserving canopy would such form in meetings meetings for discipline, as well as worship, and many who are light in their spirits, resembling the fowls of the air, would be induced to lodge under it. No boasting, no felf-feeking, no spirit that would rend or tear the tender feelings of any feeble traveller, could here have any place; because being branches which bring not forth good fruit, they are cut off and cast into the fire. But as, in the present mixed state of things, and especially in these meetings, where friends are untrained tothe publick exercise of their gifts, and unaccustomed to fit under a diverfity of fentiments, occafions cannot fail of being furnished for the trial of christian virtues, I was renewedly convinced, of the necessity which those who act in the station of clerks have to be clear in their views, by dwelling near enough to the spirit of the gospel, so as to receive qualifications therefrom, in pure wisdom, tostrengthen or make way for that lowly plant which is righteous, and boasts not itself in the garden of the Lord; but to which the promife and bleffing, belong, " for all the trees of the field shall know, that I, the Lord, have brought down the high tree, and exalted the low tree, have dried up the green tree, and caused the dry tree to flourish;" vea, the valleys are exalted and the mountains reduced, when the feed of immortal life reigns, and fways its pure sceptre in the assemblies of the people of God. The attention of my mind was, therefore, secretly attracted to the Father of lights, by whose powerful discoveries I saw myself; and notwithstanding the business of the meeting almost constantly employed me, yet I was favoured to feel a frequent abstractedness, and ample opportunities, under a prevailing fense of my own weakness, fervently to petition the Lord to be with my fpirit, to keep me patient in my present employ, meek in my demeanour, and truly a fervant to His cause and people. And I may with thankfulness acknowledge, to the praise of His grace, which is fufficient for all the wants of His children, that, however deficient in many respects for the station, I comfortably felt divine strength and wisdom underneath; wherein the precious unity of the one fpirit, not only with the prefent, but divers abfent friends, confolated my often drooping mind. Notwithstanding the foregoing observations, the meetings, in general, were attended with living virtue, and the humble travailers refreshed and instructed therewith.

After the yearly meeting was over; my husband and I staid a few days about London, as did my beloved companion R. J. to whom I still felt bound in the service which she was engaged in; and therefore set out again with her for the western counties, the seventeenth of the sixth month. We took the meetings of Staines, Basingstoke, Whitchurch, Andover, Salisbury, Rumsey, and Ringwood, in our way to Fordingbridge, where the quarterly meeting for Hampshire was held.

It was a time of some degree of favour and encouragement, to a few honest-hearted friends in that county; some of whom are under a renewed visitation of divine mercy. From hence we went to the quarterly meeting of Dorset, held at Pool; in which my dear companion was enabled to discharge charge her exercised mind of a load which she found there, in a powerful manner; the state of that county being very low, the living scarcely able to bear the dead. We then proceeded to the meetings of Shaftsbury, Marnhill, Sherborne, and Yeovil, where my dear husband left us intending for Bristol, and from thence to Ireland. On this occasion, I felt a secret breathing for the continuance of the Lord's protecting providence, both with respect to the safety of the body, and the preservation of our minds in His sear, and an increase in His savour.

From Yeovil we went to Puddemore, Longfutton, Ilminster, Chard, Bridport, and so to Exeter, where we found, as in some of the foregoing places, a few innocent, concerned friends; but the want of that baptism which initiates into the church of Christ, builds up the members into a spiritual house, a holy temple in the Lord, where He prefides and ministers, was sensibly felt; and yet the language of encouragement to press forward to this state, appeared to us to be the language of truth. In general, the spirit of the world, though often difguifed, fo much prevails, that before the right foundation can be discovered, a specious pile of buildings wants pulling down; and therefore for ministers rightly to visit meetings and individuals in this state, requires soundness of judgment, ftrength in the pure faith, patient perseverance and righteous zeal; all of which, when I fee myfelf, I feel the want of.* We staid their first day meeting

* The following passages are extracted from her letters: gth of 7th month, 1786. As I trust our meeting at Exeter, and then went to Kingsbridge, taking a little meeting at Newton Bushel in our alliance to each other in spirit, is stronger than the ties of nature, it is not (we may conclude) inconsistent therewith, to impart to each other without straitness, in the circulation of mutual love and renewed sympathy; for without this quickening experience, all our communications must be lifeless and insipid. How excellent is the life of truth! the want of it in myself, and in others, is a daily burden to my mind; and the burden bearers, in places where we come, being very few, renders it still more heavy.—To say that the state of the society is low in these western parts, is so general, and so just a complaint, that there is a danger of its being taken up without feeling sufficiently the spirit of mourning.

way,

-" Thirteenth of 7th month 1786. We endeavour quietly to get forward; and by the continued fuftaining evidence, that the best strength is graciously near to affift in the needful time, and the bleffing which makes truly rich fometimes revealed in the midst of our poverty, we are preferved, thus far, in a degree of thankfulness to the great Supplier of all the necessities of His people; though often attended with the spirit of mourning over the scattered remnant of a once flourishing heritage. Though in some places there is but little to visit, yet not being a people wholly given up to reproach, and the pure feed still groaning for deliverance, a little room is left to labour; and here and there an exercifed member dwells, with whom, whenever they were found, our minds could not but dip into near fympathy; fo that any little opening to fervice, in fuch defolate places, ought not to be declined, but rather cherished in considence that the good Husbandman will again plough and sow His plantation, and bless the labour of those He puts forth. I cannot fay that this is an expectation which hath abundantly attended my mind, in our passing along; but, just as I write, a little hope is renewed, that the vineyard will again prosper by a right and necessary extirpation of the briers, the thorns, and the noxious weeds; and, by an holy culway, and to Plymouth, where we attended their monthly meeting; which is in fo weak a state, as to be far short of supporting the dignity of christian discipline in its own spirit; and this is lamentably the case in many other places. It is only as the gathered churches become fensible of their deplorable fituation, look beyond their own natural abilities, to the well of life in themselves, and get low enough to draw water thereout, that a restoration of the power will be witneffed, which is Iesus in the midst of them. We also attended their meetings the first day following, which were deeply exercifing; but our gracious Helper was near, strengthening to an honest labour; wherein the right way to the kingdom, was proved to be widely different from that wherein many are walking; and under this help, a degree of holy folemnity was felt."

In addition to the preceding journal, which appears to be left short of the visit, the following extracts have been made from her letters; which, though not containing a regular, continued account, may afford further information and instruction.

----" The

tivation, be prepared for the true plants, wherever scattered, being enclosed within divine protection, and rendered fruitful in holiness, so as to be sitted to receive the heavenly Visitant, and made able to endure the northern and the southern blasts. O that this hope may not perish, but prove true in a suture day, when the earth is shaken of her rest! "The present journey with my beloved friend, has been a fresh trial of the uprightness of my desire after dedication; for after returning from Ireland, I earnestly sought quietude and obscurity, to settle down among my valuable connections and enjoy their society, or the benefits of solitude; but the reward of peace was not the attendant of these prospects; nor did the cloud appear to rest upon my tabernacle: the words, "Time is short," were deeply inscribed upon my heart, so that one thing or other bid me take a few more steps in the tribulated path of gospel obedience,"

"I have felt myfelf these few days back, as near the end of my present commission, my faith, patience, and every christian virtue, as to the point of land before us; and being so far from home, aggravates the prospect, and gives me very much the feeling of a pelican in the wilderness, out of the reach of almost any other help, save that holy Arm which leads about and instructs, in what appears to us the most deserted situation, and moreover hath promised to keep as the apple of the eye.

"Could I believe myself to be one thus provided for, and to whom the arm of power will continue to be extended, some of my secret cogitations would be less painful and gloomy, and with greater pleafantness, I could advance forward, though in a tribulated way. From Plymouth we came into Cornwall, taking Germains, Looe, Liskard, Austel, and Mevagessey meetings, in our way to Falmouth, where, and in its neighbourhood, we have met with fome valuable friends. In these western counties through which we have come, viz. Hampshire, Dorsetshire, Somersetshire, and Devonshire, the fociety, as to the circulation of that life which we profess to be feeking the influence of, is indeed lamentably low. A worldly spirit and a state that is neither hot nor cold, greatly prevails; fo that the few living members (for there is here and there one) are scarcely able to lift the standard of truth, or revive the remembrance of the law. But in this county, viz. Cornwall, things are better; a right zeal having sprung up in divers, to search into the real state of the church, and what is more, a care first to search themselves; an exercise greatly wanted among active members in many places. C. P.'s labours in these parts have been, we think, eminently bleffed; and the good effects of fuch a faithful discharge of duty, and bearing a steady, uniform testimony to the truth, and against error, would, there is no doubt, oftener be found, if that was oftener tried. We get but flowly forward fince we came into this county; for though I have mentioned fome good in it, yet we find it close exercifing work, to get clearly down to the good thing alluded to; and have staid longer in places hereabouts. than any where before. Yesterday was trying to my almost worn out mind; my companion got a little relieved in the morning, but I faw no way for myself all the day, though under a great weight; but so it is, we need patience and subjection in such times, lest we move before the waters have risen to their appointed height."

-" We have been favoured to get along without accidents, and have to acknowledge that, many ways, we are helped beyond our frequent expectation; finding, (as we suppose others do) difcouragements on the right hand, and on the left; which, if fuffered to prevail, would foon destroy that little grain of efficacious faith which removes mountains, and without which, however we may labour and waste our strength, such mountains of difficulty and unfruitfulness, as the christian traveller meets with, can never be removed. How neceffary is it then to fight the good fight of faith: that fo, when pure life is circulating, instead of knowing it not, we may be strengthened to lay hold of it, and to experience the inner man fo renewed in us, as to actuate every fervice.—Here we fee our own infufficiency, and how unavailing it is to depend upon our strength and judgment, in things belonging to ourselves or others."

Collumpton, a small gathering of lukewarm professors, in the general; but a few solid young people afforded a comfortable prospect for the suture. Silence was my lot here; but my spirit was deeply humbled, in feeling the baptizing virtue of truth near to purify my vessel, which I esteem more than the fairest qualifications for publick service; and am more and more led secretly to supplicate the increase of this solid experience and ability, to endure with christian sirmness and patience those dispensations by which it is obtained. Nevertheless, I am often deeply tried in religious meetings, with such exceeding great strippedness of good, and intrusion of thoughts thoughts which I by no means approve there, that I mourn under it; and when any thing opens, which appears like a discovery of truth, to give it to others when I am ready to perish with hunger myself, is almost irreconcileable; especially when after giving up to it, I find myself as poor when a meeting breaks up, as when it began. I can hardly describe what I secretly suffer from meeting to meeting, on this account; so that when I am favoured with a sensible evidence, of the fanctifying power of the Minister of ministers yet dwelling in mine earthen vessel, abundantly doth my soul acknowledge, that the excellency of the power is not of us, but of Him, and that he hath a right to reveal it when and how he pleaseth."

She attended the circular meeting at Gloucester, in the ninth month; from whence she returned pretty directly, into Yorkshire, and was at the quarterly meeting for that county. In the forepart of the tenth month, she proceeded with G. D. and others to the County of Durham, and attended the quarterly meeting there. Of these services, no remarks can be added, as there does not appear any thing material of her own preserved on these occasions.

C H A P. V.

Family Visit at Sheffield.—Her Illness there.—Confideration of removing into Ireland.—Journey into Lincolnshire.—Removal to Ireland.—Journey into Holland, Germany and France.

N the first month 1787, she was engaged with Reb. Jones and others, in a religious visit to the families of friends at Sheffield; concerning which she writes as follows:

The visit here is got through, and I hope profitably so to many, and especially the youth, of whom here are great numbers; some of the apprentices are very raw, but others seem turning about with desire to find, and make, the right purchase. They are indeed, altogether, a great load of care upon the shepherds and shepherdesses in this place, whose concern I hope is increasing. It is pleasant to find increasing unity and openness among rightly concerned friends in this place, and that love which casteth out fear.

At the close of this family visit, she was taken very ill, with a heavy cold and an inflammation of the lungs. This disorder continued for several weeks, during which she was brought very low in body and mind. But the great Physician, on whom appeared to be her sole dependance, saw meet to raise her again, and to renew a considerable portion of health and strength. Of this illness, and the exercise of her mind under it, as well as of her feelings in the review of it, fome account will be conveyed, by the following extracts from her letters, written whilft she was on the recovery.

I am now favoured with ability to answer your folicitude myfelf, and fay, that the account you had of my illness was, I apprehend, not worse than the reality; having been reduced to the gates of death to all appearance, with an inflammation of my lungs, which had been approaching fome weeks, and arrived at an awful crifis; at which time, by the merciful interposition of the good Physician, the diforder took a favourable turn, and opened again my prospects to this mixed state of things. My bodily affliction was great, but the conflicts and gloomy exercifes of my mind, were not lefs, being involved in all the weakness and insufficiency of human nature, in endeavouring to attain to the fpring of pure confolation, at the fame time that, in unerring wifdom, it was fealed in my view: fo that, upon the whole, it was a feafon of deep proving, and, I humbly trust, lasting instruction; by rendering more fingle the attention of my mind to divine discoveries, whereby our duty is feen, and strength to perform it acceptably received. To be found faithful in the great work of the present life, is an object of such magnitude, that all things elfe appear comparatively trifling, when we are looking into a state of eternal duration.

The ways of wisdom are a great deep, and the designs of removing from, or restoring to, this uncertain and probationary state of being, are often for purposes which require a daily waiting for, and dependance upon the unfoldings of pure instruction, in order profitably to discover them. I consider this to be my own case, and often remember a remark of J. Woolman's to a friend, perhaps similarly circumstanced, "do we (says he) get through with great difficulty, and yet recover; He requires that we should be purged from dross, and our ear opened to discipline."

though often reminded that in every fense I am a poor weak creature, and under abundant necessity to hold fast the little strength I have, and patiently wait for the renewings of that life which quickens, and gives joy in the spiritual creation. But I am still too carnally minded, too much disposed to look outward, and too little to press through the opposition of nature, to that true weightiness of spirit which I earnestly sought for in a late season of adversity. These things convince us that, in order to win the crown in view, we must sight the good sight, and wrestle for that faith which only gives the victory.

The subject of their removing into Ireland, and settling there, had for a considerable while, engaged her solid consideration; and the propriety of that undertaking was about this time attended with such clearness to her own mind, and that of her husband, that they apprehended the time was near for their departure from this land. Divers of her letters written on this occasion, shew her sense of the importance of this measure, and how great and exemplary was her concern, that they might might be directed wifely and fafely concerning it. The following have been felected from them.

- Our minds have been under frequent, and fometimes, unprofitable concern how to difpose of ourselves. There seems an abundance of places to choose from, both in Ireland and here; but to know our right lot, is what we are both desiring singly to stand open to the discovery of, if conveyed to us ever fo simply; the light which manifests it, be it ever so small, will, I believe, satisfy our fasting minds. We have need to be reduced low, that we may so obtain the knowledge of the divine will, as cheerfully to yield obedience thereto. Though we think we have waited long for instruction, yet as our opinions, of ourselves especially, are often very fallacious, it is not impossible but we are far from that state of self-nothingness and dependance, which I am sometimes ready to hope we are on the brink of. We are at present quite unbound to any place; perhaps to have no place of abode is the lot designed us; a lot that much opposes my inclination, but if right, however trying, it must be submitted to, and its consequences likewise, as the requirings of the day.

[—] My mind has of late looked with more clearness than before, towards Ireland. It has been a subject of consideration, attended already with much anxiety; and now that I am apprehensive I have seen a right opening towards it, I wish to be preserved from looking back, or entering into unprositable considerations about it; but rather to leave the matter at present. only standing open to the discoveries of more light, either for or against it, and respecting the right time of moving, or of not moving at all, which I know to be the situation of my husband's mind respecting it.——— I well know, that except we are in our right places, we can have no true enjoyment or expectation of support under, or the blessing upon, our allotted portion of suffering; and we have proved both lands to have in them their share of trials and probations; and know that things which look the most pleasant in either, may soon, as some of them have already at times been, be embittered, and shaded with gloom. I wish however to number my blessings, for they are many, and far beyond my deferts.

I often wish that I could learn to be still when I have nothing to do, and instead of straining my eyes in the dark, and watching the breaking of the day, to dwell quietly in the ward all night, believing in the light, and obediently working therein. The outward day breaks gradually upon us, and experience teaches us the certain indication of its approach, a dawning of light, which we are not apt to disbelieve, nor doubt that the meridian of it will come in due time. And as in the outward, we cannot haften that time, no more can we with respect to divine illuminations. Does it not therefore, remain to be our business, to wait for the light when a little of it appears, to believe in it, and that the fulness of the day will come, though we do not now fee it; remembering that, "bleffed are they that have not feen, and yet have believed." This is what I apprehend to be right to do, and what what I wish to attain; but I would by no means infinuate, that I confidently believe myfelf to have arrived at it, in the prospect of removing to Ireland; meaning only, that after a state of anxiety, and toffing about with every wind of the fentiments of others, I feemed to get into refignation's harbour. I am however willing to stand open to further conviction; and if the will should be graciously accepted for the deed, my poor bark excused the exposure, and my dear R. G. fatisfied, (which I do not doubt if it is right) it will not be an unpleasant release from an engagement to which I now feel myself rather bound: for there are many in this nation, and in our own county, (fetting afide my near relatives after the flesh) to whom I am closely attached, and from whom nature will flinch to part; but there are also divers of this class in Ireland, whose friendship will, if my residence there be right, greatly repair the lofs, and tend to fmooth the otherwife rugged path. This is looking at fecondary causes, a view which I do not wish often to take; because to be in the place affigned, (whether I was known of mortals or not) where the great work of fanctification and acceptance in divine favour is going forward, would, I am fatisfied, afford a peace superior to all human confolations, and enable the truly abased mind nobly to fay, " Although the fig-tree shall not bloffom, neither shall fruit be in the vines: the labour of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat; the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls; yet I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my falvation:" a glorious experience worthy our aspiring after! Whatever has a tendency to loosen our affections from mixed streams of refreshment, and centre them in the great source, the well in ourselves springing up unto everlasting life, I apprehend more truly qualifies for service, than a situation replete with opportunities, for the increase of human wisdom and activity in the visible church; which never fail to have in them their snares, by gratifying self, if given way to, in one shape or other.

——What I have felt at times on the fubject of our removal, cannot be eafily described; divine support and direction, if singly sought to, under the weight of it, will be found sufficient to sustain, and open the right way; but I apprehend that our small grain of faith, may meet with many trials and buffetings in our suture steppings; and oh that we may never make shipwreck thereof!

May the staff of Ifrael be our support, separately and together, and may we have no other dependance, is the secret petition of my mind; for, in the undertaking before us, we may say, that with our staff only we are passing over this Jordan.

Having come to a conclusion respecting their removal into Ireland, and obtained the concurrence of their monthly meeting, they proceeded to York and attended the quarterly meeting there; from whence, after taking a solemn and affecting leave of their near connections and friends, they set forward for the county of Lincoln; the meetings of which, as well as some others, she selt a desire to attend, in her way to the yearly meeting. Soon after this trying feparation, the following letter appears to have been written.* With divers companions in that fervice, the visited most or all of the meetings and families of friends in Lincolnshire, and attended several other meetings as she proceeded to London. Though but little of the progress of this journey is described in the following extracts; yet the feelings of her mind, and the instructive remarks set forth therein, will,

it

* Last week but one was our quarterly meeting at York, which was favoured with the overshadowings of the heavenly wing. It was a parting time, and almost too affecting for my present weak state; but I endeavoured what I could to look beyond personal enjoyments, to that fellowship which is pure, standing with the Father and with the Son, and which admits of no change by outward feparation, if we retain our integrity and places, in the adoption of children. On feventh day morning after, came the dregs of the cup of removal; a heart tendering farewell to my beloved connections at York, with the proprietors of the school, and some of their husbands. It was almost too much for my frame, faith being at a low ebb, and discouragements coming in like a flood; but in the opening of true vision, the spirit of the Lord was lifted up as a standard against them. As to the body, I have now parted with many who feemed interwoven with my existence: with divers of them it was gradual, and I esteem it a favour it was so: but though I am fensible, that in the church I leave both fathers and mothers behind; and as to brethren and fifters in the truth, they feem almost daily added to, and promife, according to their prefent growth, to be skilful fervants in the family; yet the near unity my spirit has felt with some in Ireland, affords me a ray of hope, that should we be spared with life and strength, to enter into and rightly stand in our lots at Clonmel, we shall find every want supplied, and true yoke-fellows beyond our deserts.

it is apprehended, render it proper to infert them here.

We are favoured to get along as well as we might expect, we hope in some degree of sympathy with the state of the best things in this desolate county; but upon the whole, my mind is and hath been favoured with a calm, especially for these sew days back, which tends to promote the restoration of health, and strengthens with a good degree of resignedness, to look forward to the prospects before me; and so far from considering the pursuit of them a hardship, I esteem the end proposed thereby, a favour of which I am unworthy; for what is there worth living for, but to be found in the discharge of our duty?

We are now in the Isle of Axolm, visiting a few desolate professors, who are like sheep having no shepherd; and yet in a place as much neglected as perhaps any in the society, we are comforted in finding a feed alive, resembling Joseph in Egypt, and may say, for my own part, that I have selt the most solid reward for a little labour here, of any since leaving York. It is not after the sight of the eye, or the hearing of the ear, that we can judge aright.

They that fuffer with the feed, shall reign with it; but it must not be in our way, nor in our time. Patience is due on our part, and the exercise of that grain of faith which we have received; for, "by faith the elders obtained a good report," I prefume of the Lord, rather than of men. Then let us not be afraid of the trial, for its efficacy is proved thereby. O that I was stronger in this spot! for even fince we left York, and particularly on leaving it, I have feemed to be reduced to the lowest ebb, and nature hath foreboded discouragements beyond what I thought I was able to bear. But this is not always the case; for sometimes, when every thing elfe is shaded with gloom, the foundation is most clearly revealed, and its ftanding fure incontrovertibly known and believed in; fo that all things have appeared possible to him that believeth, and the ways of the Most High discovered to be higher than our ways, and his thoughts than our thoughts. Here I love to repose myself, and stand resigned to every dispensation which has the remotest tendency, not only to let me see the work of my day, but to refine and qualify for it.

I have recovered fo much, that I have now scarce any thing to complain of respecting the body. To be fure it is not very strong, but it has thus far proved able to bear all that was laid upon it; which is encouragement to myfelf, and also to others, to perfevere in yielding ourfelves up, under the power of the crofs, to every opening of duty, feeing that all things are possible to them that believe. And vet I fainted in my mind many a time, and feemed to be one of those who have no faith: fo that, on reflecting upon this little embaffy, the prospect and the progress of it, it seems as if it was all done for me by that good Hand, which requires the passiveness rather than the activeness of the creature, in profecuting His defigns. Though I now give a pretty good account of the body, I may also add, that, fometimes, my mind gets encompassed with glooms and discouragements, which nothing can diffipate, fave a state of refignation and quiet dependance upon the everlafting Arm of Omnipotence; and this is often fo hard to attain, that I am afraid of falling in the struggle, when a hope is again revived, of being under divine protection, and that the day's work is really going forward. This, at times, introduces a quiet ferenity, and strengthens to leave the things that are behind, and press forward to those that are before. The fympathy of my friends under my late trials, has been confidered a favour of which I am unworthy; and there is undoubtedly no better way of fecuring it upon the foundation of gospel fellowship, than by learning to live without it, and looking fingly to the Rock from whence all good things are hewn, and the hole of the pit, the humbling dispensations of infinite wifdom, from whence they are dug.

Soon after the yearly meeting at London, they proceeded for Clonmel in Ireland, where she was favoured to arrive in fasety, in the 6th month 1787, with her health much improved, and under a good degree of peace and satisfaction of mind; which continued for some time after her arrival, as a source of consolation and encouragement she writes as follows:

Our removal has altogether been bleffed with a good degree of that peace which paffeth understanding, and attended with such circumstances, thus far, as we have great cause to be thankful for. An unmixed cup of comfort in human life, is what my short passage through the world, has taught me not to look for, and a small degree of religious experience, not to pray for; and yet to pray for those things which are really good for us, will ever require the renewings of that Spirit which only breathes the will of the Father. Nature shrinks at fuffering; fometimes I am ready to anticipate a draught of it, proportionable to the late and prefent degree of favour; and fometimes I am flattered with a language that tells me, " it is already drunk, and that the bitterness of death is past." An humble, refigned mind is however always our duty and interest to press after. It has a fortification in itfelf against the varied assaults of Satan, and a sufficient portion of Gilead's Balm for every afflictive dispensation of infinite wisdom; both of which, if my natural life is spared, will, I do believe, be my companions, and prove frequent trials of an abiding; and advancement in that gospel Spirit, which loveth, hopeth, and endureth through all.

of

Her mind had frequently, for a confiderable time before this period, been impressed and closely exercised with an apprehension, that it would be required of her to pay a religious visit to some parts of Germany and France: and, a sew months after her settlement in Ireland, this concern increased with such weight and evidence, that she was constrained, in resignation, to spread it before the friends of their monthly meeting; who, after solid deliberation and sympathy, concurred therewith, and gave her their certificate of unity and approbation. She received also the near concurrence of their quarterly meeting, and that of the morning meeting of ministers and elders in London, and set forward on this journey in the 3d month, 1788, in company with her husband, George Dillwyn and his wife, and Mary Dudley; who were also bound to this service, and engaged therein with the unity of friends.

The following parts of her letters on this occafion, describe the previous exercise of her mind, and contain a pretty regular, though short account of the journey, from the commencement of it, to its conclusion.

12th month 1787. My mind after a season of deep trial and exercise, was led to visit, in what appeared to myself an extraordinary degree of gospel love, many in that country, and some parts of Germany contiguous thereto; fully believing, according to my feelings, that there were spiritual worshippers in those parts.

12th month 1787. If the prospect before us be in divine wisdom, we have great cause to acknowledge that it is unfathomable, and past our finding out, because of my incapacity, in every respect to perform such a journey to the honour of the great Cause. I wish, however, now to leave caring too much about the future, and endeavour after quiet resignation; well knowing, that by taking ever so much unprositable thought, I cannot add one cubit to my stature, nor make one hair of my head white or black; and also hoping, that when it comes to the trial, the will may be accepted for the deed; which I have no doubt will be the case, if the province meeting, or my fympathizing friends, advise me against it; or if no friend of superior weight in the ministry, proves under the like concern, and admits us in their company. Discouragements of various kinds crowd in at times upon me, but when gospel love flows from the living fountain, it overpowers all selfish considerations, and shews me my own unworthiness to be, in the least degree, employed in the divine hand.

Ist month 1788. Our fituation at prefent, requires at least a grain of that faith which has power to remove mountains; for, truly vain is the help of man, in cases where the pure seed is to be exalted. A sense of our insufficiency to do any good thing without divine affistance, will, I trust, whatever our trials or temptations may be, so humble us, as wholly to prevent a vain dependance upon any thing of our own; but surely there is as much need for watchfulness and prayer at this day, as when the disciples were immediately recommended to it.

Ist month 1788. My mind is often under a load of exercise on my own account, and in care lest the precious cause should suffer by me. The present is a time of deep trial and searching of heart, lest we should be meddling with, or doing, any thing which is not in the clear discovery of gospel light. When I consider how little I am experienced in the station wherein I may be likely to move, the newness and peculiarity of the service in prospect, and even the weakness of the outward tabernacle, (which to be sure I think least of) my feelings suggest the applicableness of the saying, "I am a worm." This however cheers me, that without some degree of clearness, we need not, neither shall attempt to move.

2d month 1788. I have been of late confiderably indifposed, but upon the whole am much better, though every day sensible of having (by some means or other) a very broken constitution. If it do but last until the portion of work allotted me is finished, that is enough, even though it be performed under the pressure of bodily infirmities; all which may be no more than necessary to keep the mind to its proper centre, and direct its attention, singly to an inheritance undefiled, and which sadeth not away.

3d month 1788. According to prefent appearances, we, (I mean our little company) ftand in abundant need of the whole armour of light. We are about to embark for a country, the language of which none of us know, and in expectation of a path wherein we can fee no footsteps, and which must be attended with new and various trials. May our trust be in the Lord alone, who is able, in feasons of the greatest difficulty, to encrease our faith, and make way for us where we see no way.

Having the concurrence of friends, we left London and proceeded for Harwich, where we were detained feveral days for want of a fair wind; during which time we had two meetings, and afterwards, (23d of 3d month) the wind turning in favour of our leaving that port, we embarked; but it was fourth day night, the twenty-feventh, before we landed at Helvoetsluys, which was nevertheless a favour, and I hope esteemed so by us all. We got to an agreeable English inn there, and after a pretty good night's rest, set forward towards Rotterdam, by way of the Briel and Delf, and came in fafe rather late at night, it being there a great day's work of about twenty-five miles. We travelled in an open waggon the first seven miles, the road being fo bad that no other carriage could get along with fafety, and the rest of the way went in their boats called Treckschuyts, which are drawn by a horse, at the rate of about three miles an hour. This is a very pleafant and easy way of travelling, and it was through a country made as agreeable by improvements as it is capable of, being very flat and marshy. Many of the inhabitants followed us through fome towns, and gazed exceedingly at us; and fome of them, as well as they were able, manifested a love which met that in us that drew us hither; but the strangeness of our language to each other, was a continual discouragement; yet as it was not of our own bringing on, we endeavoured to keep quiet under it, and fecretly defired that our minds might be fo influenced, as to convey to them, in filence, that which is better than words. We have now got into fo new a line, that it is no wonder if we should be more than usually blind; and it will be well, if fome of us should be also more than usually dependant and patient respecting our steppings; for being separated and remote from our friends, and fome of dispositions rather hasty than otherwise, there is, no doubt, a danger of fometimes pressing forward with too much earnestness, and thereby of preventing the completion completion of those little services, in one way or other, which are intended for the purchase of our own peace at least. Though Holland was not much in the prospect of us who came from Ireland, yet we have been favoured with something more than a hope, that we are thus far in our places, and feel a comfortable and strengthening unity one with another therein. The desire of my mind is at present strong, that, though in ever so much weakness, we may be enabled to pass through the country in that singleness and dedication of heart, which may preserve us from condemnation.

We ftaid three days in Rotterdam, and had two publick meetings at the meeting house belonging to friends; there are a great many English people in that city, and the attenders of our meetings being principally of that class, we had no need of an interpreter. There are some serious people with whom we got acquainted, and to whom our visit seemed acceptable, but no professors with us, except one person, who cannot be expected, in his present state, to throw much light upon the testimony of truth; but he was very willing to render us such services as were in his power, which we took kind.

From Rotterdam, we came forward to Amsterdam, by way of Leyden, Haarlem, &c. and were kindly received by our friend John Vanderwerf. Here our minds, generally, got very low on divers accounts. Several of us were poorly with complaints in the stomach, &c. which strangers are subject to, before their constitutions come to bear the difference of their meat, drink, air, &c. The few under the name of friends in this great city, vielded us little of that strength which is the fruit of fympathy of spirit, and inward acquaintance with divine requirings; and which if right, would have been truly falutary and cordial to us at that time, as we looked upon ourselves to be then embarking upon the most arduous and discouraging part of our journey; having a great distance to travel, entirely unacquainted with the country, strangers to all their different languages, except a little French, and no interpreter to accompany us. Under these complicated trials, our faith got into the furnace afresh. This was much the case with me, and my dear companions felt no less. However, as we endeavoured after refignation, and were fometimes replenished with strength patiently to wait for renewed manifestations of duty, way opened, by degrees, to get clear of that place. We attended their little monthly meeting, the business whereof was transacted in the Dutch language; fo that we had not an opportunity of judging much about them; except that their appearance, and the feelings of our minds, convinced us that true religion is at a low ebb among them; and yet there is fomething tender which loves truth, and with which, a family visit among them, made us better acquainted.* We had also three publick meetings there, which

few

^{*} We were comforted in the belief that their folitary fituations are divinely regarded, and hope that divers of their deficiencies in fome points wherein we have been otherwise taught, are counterbalanced in the fight of holy compassion and justice, by the fincerity of their intentions, and the discouragements in many respects peculiar to them, which we, by experience, know little which were attended by many of the inhabitants of different descriptions; but there are a few with whose company, both in and out of meetings, we were comforted. They are a ferious religious people, not connected with any fociety, and believing in the spirituality of all true worship. We paid a visit to one of their families, which confifts of a widow, her fon, and two daughters, none of them young. They are people of confiderable property, which they devote very much to the fervice of the poor. They were affectionately kind, and demonstrated their unity with, and attachment to our principles, as far as they had heard them in the meetings which they attended, and were fully convinced of the necessity of an inward work, and that all true worship must be performed in spirit and in truth. In a religious opportunity which we had with them before we parted, the cementing influence of gospel love flowed among us like a stream. From this family, we were furnished with letters of recommendation to fuch as themselves in Germany, some of whom we have seen to our satisfaction. During our ftay in Amfterdam, we were interpreted for, by John Vanderwerf, or one of his fons, both in publick and private. It feemed strange, and rather hard to us women, especially at first; but we foon got over it, and had reason to hope that our religious about. The keeping up of a meeting for worship every sirst day, in their weak state, is an act of faithfulness, which we might be often ready to faint under, were we in their situation, separated from the strengthening communications which religious society affords, (not having received a visit of this kind for four years) and being despited among the worldly minded.

religious communications were not materially affected; our friend feemed to have an awe upon his mind when he stood up, took off his hat, and delivered, fentence by fentence, what was expressed. Thus after spending eight days at Amsterdam, and being deeply tried in that place, our minds were strengthened to leave it, (the 9th of the 4th month,) with a renewed trust, that the great Shepherd of Ifrael, who knows his own sheep in every trial and fituation, however remote from the knowledge and confolation of their friends, would superintend us, and graciously reveal himself for our help, in the needful time. We essayed to proceed by way of Utrecht, (where a few books were distributed, and much love felt for the inhabitants) Nimeguen, and through part of the king of Pruffia's dominions, into the Elector of Bavaria's to a place called Duffeldorff, where we again made a little ftop, finding a few who could speak English, and most of them French. Here we commenced acquaintance with a folid, religious man, named Michael Wetterboar, to whom we were recommended by the people whom I have mentioned at Amsterdam. Being gathered to the principle of truth, and engaged to conform to it, as revealed in the line of his own experience, he walks much alone in a dark and diffipated place. He was a kind friend to Claude Gay, when paying a fimilar visit to our's in this country, many years ago, and was rejoiced to fee us. He lamented the lonefomeness of his situation, and said that his mind was strengthened by the visit. From hence we went eighteen miles and back, out of our road, to Elberfeld, where, as at many other places, for want of an interpreter, we fuffered what often appears to us an unavailing baptism for the testimony's fake. But perhaps it is not fo much fo as we are apt to think: the ways of the Most High are not our ways, nor his thoughts our thoughts; we know not but this deeply humbling path, and the fecret exercifes we have daily to pass through without any visible relief, may have a use beyond our finite conceptions; fo that it is fafest to leave thefe things, and outward confiderations about them, in the hand which can blefs, and render fruitful, the things which are not, by caufing them to bring to nought the things which are. However, we found an opening to fome folid conversation with a few in this place, and understood that there are many religious people there; but we were difcouraged by the difficulties we found in getting an acquaintance with them; fo we returned, after staying one night, to Dusseldorss. We left that place, and paffing through a dark country, arrived in two days at Newvied, the 18th of the 4th month. We have had very little rain fince we came upon the continent, confequently the roads are dry, but being for the most part a deep fand, we have not been able to travel over it fo quickly as is defirable. Thirty miles a day, is I think nearly the average of our expedition, though we mostly travel post. The vehicles are heavy, being generally covered waggons or clumfy coaches. We mostly prefer the former, as ourselves and luggage meet the best accommodation in them. The inns are pretty good, and the people respectfully kind to us, and in that line but little difficulty occurs in making ourselves understood. Our road has lain upon the banks of the Rhine, and furnished us with prospects of a country extremely beautiful, and, in some places, for miles together, covered with vineyards. But the pleasure which we might innocently have derived from those fcenes, has met with continual damps, by the grofs proftitution of facred things which, in the croffes and images thickly fcattered upon the road, give pain to every feeling whereby spiritual worship is promoted. The Roman Catholics are very numerous in many parts which we have passed through; but, in most places, the Protestants enjoy the privileges they defire without interruption; and among them there is undoubtedly an awakened, fincere hearted people. On our arrival at Newvied, we found a great change in the face of things, it being a new and pleafant town, inhabited by ferious Protestants, and principally by the Moravians; though there are about twenty families of the Menonists, and as many of a people who call themselves Inspirants, but by others are often called Quakers. We were directed to a Moravian inn, which proved very agreeable, feeling ourselves in that family very much as if we were at home. Here we were foon visited by several of the Moravian brethren and fifters, fome of whose minds appeared unprejudiced, and intent upon spiritual improvement; which drew them often to our apartments, and opened a door for the communication of fuch gospel truths, as, from time to time, occurred; and we had a comfortable hope, that they dropped into some of their minds as seed into good ground. We had the advantage in that place of an interpreter, a young man of the Moravian œconomy, who cheerfully befriended us on many occasions; and though, though, at the first, he appeared under difficulty in communicating religious matter which was new to him, yet before we went away, his understanding feemed more opened, and his feelings much more cordially disposed to the principle of truth as we profess it, and to the several branches thereof. We had a publick meeting in that place the evening before we left it, after a week's deep exercise and fecret fuffering; but this opportunity furnished us with renewed cause, to put our trust in the gentle puttings forth of the Shepherd of Ifrael, and in the revelation of His power, which we humblingly find is fometimes withheld, until the feafons of our greatest extremity. The young man, our interpreter, readily accepted his office in the meeting, without any previous request, and performed it with great folidity. Our vifit to that place was closed by a feafon of divine favour, in a family which cheerfully received the testimony we had unitedly to bear, to the efficacy of spiritual worship, and the necessity of preparation for it; and in much love and tenderness of fpirit we left Newvied. "O the depth and extent of the riches, both of the knowledge and wisdom of God! how unfearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out !" We had abundant cause in our travels through Germany, to fay, that we were led in paths which we knew not, and frequently reduced to a state of extremity. We were sensible, according to our measures, of the mist of superstition and idolatry which overspreads a great part of the country; and also had, at times, revealed that most fure word of prophecy, which penetrates the obscurest recesses of Sion's travellers draws them into hidden fellowship one with another, and unites opened

them in the fufferings of the precious feed, though differently fituated in the world, and their profession in it various. Thus were we led in paths which we knew not, and ways we had not feen, and were often incapable of finding out those whom we thus felt, and when we did discover such, we were unable for want of a knowledge of their language, fully to communicate to them: but trusting in the all-fufficiency of almighty help, for the fupply of all their needs, we were favoured, when dedication of heart had been attained, and the green pastures of life opened, to lie down beside the still waters, and leave the event of our travel to Him who bleffeth, or blasteth, at his pleasure. From Newvied we came to Wisbaden, a place in great request for warm bathing, there being feveral boiling hot fprings in the town, from which the water is conveyed to private cifterns, where it cools for use. There seemed something rather attractive in this place to our minds, and yet, as was often the case, discouragements prevailed over our best feelings, and we proceeded to Frankfort, a day's journey. There we staid two nights; but though we had letters of recommendation to religious characters, yet for want of being able to make ourselves understood, we had no conversation with any but a Pietist who spoke English but poorly, and who, after fome discourse on religious subjects, left us with professions of love. From Frankfort we proceeded to Basle, a large protestant town, where we arrived the 3d of the 5th month. Here our minds feemed arrested, and all efforts towards purfuing our journey were painful, until we had fettled a few days under our exercise, and embraced, though in the cross, such opportunities as opened for relief. Having some letters of recommendation to ferious people, they were presented to them; in consequence of which, several visits were paid us, and we observed in some rather a critical investigation of our principles. They were cautious of embracing us until they perceived the doctrines we held; after which there was great openness in some of their minds, candidly to receive fuch communications on religious subjects as from time to time opened. One of them understanding the English language well, was, in several instances, a very friendly interpreter to us; and his mind being acquainted with divine illuminations, he often discovered symptoms of conviction and fensibility, when, as a channel, the openings of truth were paffing through him. In a large company to which we were invited, this person, observing our difposition to filence, kindly and feelingly proposed and requested a compliance of the company. We were favoured, to our thankful admiration, with the humbling influence of divine love, and strength renewedly to bear testimony to the necessity of an inward preparation for the folemn act of true worship, which requires neither forms nor ceremonies, to render it acceptable to the Father of Spirits. The opportunity was concluded in folemn fupplication, which our friendly interpreter rendered, fentence by fentence, into the Dutch language, with a reverential awe, whereby the liveliness of it was preserved. We had also a comfortable season of retirement in the family of another of our friends there, whose wife and daughters profess not to fee the necessity of a religious circumspect life, as he, and his eldest son do; but they were affectionate and attentive to us, and we had reason to hope, received no unprofitable impressions by this little act of dedication. This person conducted with true brotherly kindness towards us, discovering great fimplicity of heart, and an openness to receive the truth, where-ever or however he might find it; being experienced in that great work of repentance unto life, and ceasing from many entanglements in the world, which he believed had a tendency to enflave his mind, and to keep him in a frate of feparation from divine favour: fo that to meet with fellow pilgrims who could tell him a little of their knowledge of the right way, feemed like marrow to his bones. We have feveral times fallen in with persons who kindly entertained Claude Gay, in his lonesome travel through these parts; and in Basle we have found two agreeable religious old men, with whom he was hospitably sustained for three weeks. They are of a people called Inspirants, and often by others Quakers; but upon an acquaintance with them, especially at Newvied, we found them no less active than other profesfors in finging, praying, preaching, &c. in their congregations. They appear to be descendants of the French prophets: and among them there is an honest hearted number to whom the love and language of the gospel flowed with more openness, and appeared to be received with more fimplicity, than among fome others. To these two elderly men we paid several visits, which were not unattended with instructive conversation; but this did not afford that relief which our exercifed mind feemed to want, nor could we comfortably see our way from the town, until we had, in their family and among fuch as they might invite, borne testimony, by our example also, to the necessity of filent waiting.* It was a season obtained with difficulty, and paffed through in tribulation of spirit. The candle was not easily put into the candlestick, and when there, evidently sufpected by these people, not to be in its right place. But before the meeting closed, publick testimony was borne to it, and to the refurrection of that life which is the light of men, being the only qualification of spirit, to come forth from that state of darkness and death in which we are by nature, and to perform any religious duties, or acceptable fervice to the Lord. At the close of this opportunity, we parted with these two men in love, though not a perfect unity of fentiment, which appeared more fully by an affectionate letter which one of them fent after us. There was also in this place, and in most others where we stopped, a prejudice against women's preaching, which encreased the difficulty our minds often felt in obtaining relief among a people of a strange language; but though our efforts were few and feeble, vet as far as dedication clothed us, and we were careful not to cast away our confidence, we had ever cause gratefully to acknowledge, that great recompense of reward was vouchsafed, and the soul strengthened to return to its rest, under a renewed sense that the Lord had dealt bountifully with it. The kindness we have

might

H

^{*} To put the light into the candlestick, so as to bear, even in private, a testimony to the truth, and spiritual anointing in silence, is here a greater trial of our love and faithfulness to the cause, than any can readily believe, who have not been led among those who are ignorant of a cessation from their own works.

have met with in many places, exceeds what we might have expected, having feveral times experienced fo much of the promife fulfilled, that we have met with brethren and fifters, who, though not altogether of the fame profession, are fellow travellers in the christian path. Sometimes a wifdom appears in our being stripped of that outward help, fo defirable, of an interpreter; as in our present circumstance, if any good is done, there is no part of it wherein the creature can glory. 'There is one thing which exposes us, that does not often fuit the disposition of our minds, which is, that at the best inns (where we generally go) we must always dine and fup at the ordinaries, where there is often a great refort of company. If there is any use in this mortification, it will amply make up; the only testimonies which are publickly borne this way, are by our men friends keeping on their hats, and refusing to pay for the musick which sometimes accompanies our meals. We took a coach from Basle * to Bern, where we staid over a first day

H 2 pretty

* The following letter was written at Basle the 9th of 5th month 1788.

As it is probable we may leave Basle without taking leave of thee, and acknowledging thy kindness with a gratitude due to it, and feeling in my heart a christian salutation, I take the liberty, this way, of expressing my desire for thy increasing knowledge of the mysteries of the kingdom of God; which our blessed Lord thanked his Father for concealing from the wise and prudent, and revealing unto babes. The sacred influences of divine light upon our understandings, are cheering to the mind, and animate its efforts to obtain the liberty of the children of God: and as we wait in this light, and believe in its manifestations, we are favoured to see more light, the means appointed to procure it are revealed to us, and strength given to follow.

pretty much in private, fave that an agreeable folid man, an Inspirant, paid us some visits, I believe to mutual fatisfaction. We heard of a religious

But as it was prophetically spoken of the Saviour of the world, that there was no form or comeliness in him. that when we should fee him, we should defire him, fo the simplicity of his gospel is found to be. Nothing more strongly opposes the will, wisdom, and activity of the creature, than in all abasement, fingly, to depend upon the promifed Comforter, the Spirit of Truth, the anointing which an Apostle said the true believers received and had abiding in them, the unspeakable gift purchased by the precious blood of the Lamb, and dispensed in infinite mercy for our falvation, which, through its converting, purifying power is effected; for he gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, &c. Nevertheless the glorious end for which this facrifice was made, ought to be advanced to, and our dependance increase upon the smallest discoveries of the spirit of Christ, though to the natural mind there may be no form nor comeliness in them: but it may forrowfully be faid, with respect to His inward appearance the fecond time without fin unto falvation, that he came to his own, but his own received him not; yet let us remember for our encouragement, that to as many as did receive him, he gave power to become the fons of God. So that if we furrender ourselves as clay into the hands of the potter, and our wills to the refiner's fire, we shall, this way, be made living partakers of the fufferings of Christ, being fools for his fake, and, according to our measures, conformable to his death. This is an experience which closes the lips in awful filence, and restrains the imagination from feeding upon the Tree of knowledge; without which restraint, there is a danger of our not sufficiently embracing the excellent example of Him, who was led as a lamb to the flaughter, and as a sheep dumb before her shearers. The spirit of this world, in any of its false refinements, cannot preside here, neither can any righteousness of our own; because we humblingly see with the apostle, that it is not for any of these work exercifed coachman for whom was left a book or two, he not being at home. And thus, after fecretly fuffering, as in many other places, we took our departure for Geneva, travelling through a very beautiful country the last twenty miles, by the lake of Geneva, and in prospect of the Alps; which were covered with fnow in the latter end of the fifth month, although the weather was very hot with us. Thefe, with the steep and craggy rocks of Switzerland, and pines of various kinds growing spontaneously upon them, and forming shades and wildernesses, compose a scene in nature truly magnificent; indeed for fix hundred miles back, the prospect of mountains spread over with vineyards, with the grandeur of the Rhine, flowing below them, and its banks adorned with variety and abundance of fruit trees in full bloffom, would have afforded a scene of pleasure to spirits at liberty for fuch enjoyment. But our hearts were on the whole too fad to be captivated thereby; a feed attracted us in fympathy, which was not fo visible, nor had carried with it thefe fenfible delights; and for it, in part, we travailed in spirit. We spent one day and two nights in Geneva, where being informed that John Eliot and Ady Bellamy were

H 3 waiting

which we have done, but of the mercy of Christ, that he saveth us, and by those means which he died to obtain, even the washing of regeneration, and the renewings of the Holy Ghost. Fervently desiring that thy sincere mind may, through the humbling processes of true spiritual baptism, be led, in the faith and patience, to the rest which is prepared for the children of God. I remain in gospel love, waiting for us at Lyons, we hasted to them, and found their patience tried by a week's detention in that town. We joined them, and became comfortable; and spending one day to rest and be refreshed there, took a boat, and rapidly poured down the Rhine, one hundred and thirty two miles in feventeen hours, to a place called Pont St. Esprit, from which we came to Nifmes and Congenies, the 22d and 23d of the 5th month, having travelled nine hundred and fifty miles from Amsterdam. It now looks pleafant to think of being foon among our friends, and a people to whom we may speak without an interpreter; for in that respect our situation is a fort of exile, but greatly made up, by a secret sense, more often renewed to us than we might have expected, that we are here in the appointment of Him who graciously regards the sparrows, fo that not one of them falls to the ground without His permiffion: and truly these innocent open hearted people are of more value than many fparrows. We entered Nifines, with fuch a peaceful ferenity upon our spirits, as portended the acquaintance we have fince commenced with minds panting after the waters of Shiloh, and the strengthening effects of true gospel labours. We went next day to Congenies, about four leagues. Our arrival drew out of their habitations the people in general; fome looked at us with aftonishment, and others with countenances which put me in mind of Mary's falutation to Elizabeth. These soon acknowledged us, and drew us into the house of a steady, valuable widow, where we were folemnly faluted and received, and our minds melted together; and fuch a stream of gospel love flowed, as some of us thought thought exceeded what we had before experienced, though no words were used to express it. We obtained lodgings at the house of a person not profesfing with them, with a view not unnecessarily to interrupt them in their useful employments, and to be at liberty ourselves to go among them as there appeared a fervice; but we only lodged there one night, and that with difficulty, their defire to have us among them, and to render us their fervices in their own way, was fo ftrong, that, after contending the point, we gave way, and returned to the widow's where we were entertained with every thing of the best they could supply. Our friends are most of them poor, industrious people; but we were favoured with all that was needful, though those things we call so are scarce, the country being generally overspread with vineyards, oliveyards, and mulberry-trees. It can hardly be thought how comfortable we were: peace of mind sweetens every inconvenience. We found these people different from our fociety in their outward appearance, and in their want of fettlement, and fufficient quietude in their religious assemblies; but the humility and simplicity of their meetings, attended with a lively consciousness of their own weakness, make them ready to embrace every offer of help, that is fuited to their capacity and progress in the truth. There are a few of them, among the younger fort particularly, who furnish a hope that there will be a fociety in this dark part of the world, established upon the right foundation. We foon found, that to be ufeful to them, the visitors must be weak with the vifited, and in christian condescension bear with them, until truth opened a door of utterance to shew them a more excellent way. Their monthly meeting was held on first day, wherein, of their own accord, they laid open their discipline, by reading their minutes or agreements acceded to on their first setting up these meetings; which, for confistency with their profession, are, in general, fuperior to our expectations. But it extends no farther than to a care over their poor, and one another's moral conduct; they have no other tenets, nor any testimonies, recorded, by which they may be distinguished; and our little band were not without a guard, with respect to proposing, or urging any thing to them, which they have not, at prefent, a capacity rightly to adopt and support. At Congenies, and in its neighbourhood, we fpent two weeks; visited all their families; attended their monthly meeting; had a meeting for conference with the elder rank; a youths meeting, and a very fatisfactory publick meeting with the inhabitants; and divers folemn opportunities unforescen; all which brought us into near fympathy with them, and often deeply humbled and baptized our spirits on their account, as well as our own. Our parting was a very affecting one, but under a comfortable fense that the Shepherd of Israel has them under His gracious care. From Congenies we went to Giles's about twenty one miles, where there are between twenty and thirty who profess with us, as they do at Congenies; but they do not appear fo much awakened in their minds, nor fo earnest to be vifited. They received us, however, with great kindness, and were pleased with the visit, which perhaps may be profitable to fome beyond what we can now fee. As without faith it is impoffible fible to please our all-wise Director, so it is impossible to persevere and hold to the end in His fervice, and in the humiliations which the creature meets with in it, without this precious ingredient, which is his own peculiar gift, and filences all fleshly reasonings. After having three meetings at Giles's, we came to Nifmes, and there took coach for Lyons, one hundred and fifty miles. From that we travelled post, by way of Roane, Fontainbleau, Paris, and Verfailles, to Alençon, where we arrived the 2d of the 7th month, feveral of us being weak and weary, after having travelled near fix hundred miles from Nifmes. In our way to Lyons, we passed through Dauphine, where fome of our minds were not infensible of an attractive influence: but having no certain information of some we had heard of there, and several of our company strongly bending homewards, it did not feem the time eafily to find them out.

Thy Friend,

Truly there is a hidden, precious feed fcattered up and down, not only in these parts, but in Holland and Germany, measurably gathered, both from the superstitious, and the vain world; and feeking a foundation whereon they may rest the sole of their feet. This appeared beyond all doubt, both from a little knowledge which we obtained in those countries of some, and from that most sure word of prophecy, which penetrates the obscure recesses of Sion's travellers, and unites them all together in the ocean of gospel love. At Alenson, we were affectionately received by John De Marssillac, and courteously by his wife, who, through the whole of our visit there, which was three days, appeared to enjoy the company of their vifitors. Here we endeavoured to take fresh counsel about the way of proceeding to England, which ended in the conclusion, of George and Sarah Dillwyn and John De Marsillac going to the Island of Guernsey, to visit the few friends there; and T. E. A. B. M. Dudley, my husband, and myself, to London directly, by way of Dieppe, which we pursued accordingly, and arrived in London the 13th of 7th month 1788.

H 5

appeared

We have had a folitary and exercifing travel; but through infinite kindness, are again restored to our friends, and some of us to our native country. We attended the quarterly meeting of London: the fight of so many friends was new and reviving to us; and the renewed evidence, that the Lord had been mercifully with us, that he had led us about, and instructed us, and tenderly preserved us when, in child-like simplicity, we depended upon his counsel, afforded, and still affords, abundant cause to praise him for his mercies past, and humbly hope for more.

Thus, after a journey of more than two thousand five hundred miles, attended with many difficulties, and close exercises of body and mind, she was enabled to return to her home at Clonmel, in the 8th month 1788, under the comfortable sense of divine favour and protection. Some parts of her letters written after her return, on a retrospect of this visit, appear to be worthy of insertion.

-We have had, fince leaving York, many new scenes of trial, and new demonstration of prowidential care; especially in the course of the long and deeply proving journey which we undertook, in hope that the Hand of Omnipotence led forth to the Continent. The state of mind in which I was involved previous to it, the inexpressible humiliations and beforeness which attended the accomplishment of it, and fince that, the commemoration of unmerited support, with the renewed discovery of human frailty, feem to change, in many respects, the face of this world to me. I am redeemed from the love of it; but that I have learned to expect less from it; feeing more and more, that this is indeed a probationary state of being, and that our fufferings and joys in it are no otherwise important, than as they affect our' attachment to the one great object of eternal good, and our communion with it in the filence of all thatis fleshly.

——— It is a joyous confideration, that the glorious light of the gospel is emitted from the Sun of Righteousness; and that, though instruments may be used to bear testimony to it, yet that he, before whom all nations are but as the drop of a bucket, the small dust of the balance, and who takes up the isles as a very little thing, can, when they fail, do his work without them, and "glorify the house of his glory." I humblingly reslect upon our late journey on the Continent, and am bound to acknowledge (however as an individual I have failed in truly saying, "thy will be done") that the word of the Lord is faithfulness and truth. My mind is creating and converting word of Omnipotence, the pure feed of divine life was visited with greater efficacy, than the discouragements which we were under, allowed us to know at that time. But ah, poor Amsterdam! yea, poor Rotterdam! and many, many places on that side the Continent, touching whose inhabitants my soul, at times, sings mournfully to its well-beloved!

CHAP.

Her Concern respecting a Boarding School for semale Youth.—Visit to Friends Families in Cork.—Journey to London.—Visit to Dunkirk, Holland, Pyrmont, &c.—Her Return—and Decease.—Testimonies concerning her.

I may now be proper to take some notice of a concern which had weightily engaged her attention, respecting the propriety of opening a boarding-school at Clonmel, for the religious care and education of semale youth. This subject had, for some time, been deeply pondered, both by herself and her husband; and had, at length, so matured in their minds, as to afford an evidence that it would be right to set forward the work.

Their motives for this undertaking appear to be purely difinterested, and with the single view of promoting a guarded and religious education of children; being themselves in easy circumstances, and under no necessity to pursue this employment, for family support.

When we confider the susceptibility of youth to early impressions, with the general permanency thereof on their minds; and reslect that they are soon to participate in the concerns of life, and will, in a few years, be the principals on this stage of being; we cannot but perceive the extensive importance, both to individuals and the community, of an early moral and religious education; nor be surprised mankind, should feel it her duty to cultivate this fure ground of general reformation, and to encourage others, upon pure principles, to engage in an employment so truly honourable and productive of good.

Though under doubts and discouragements of mind, arising chiefly from the humble sense of her own weakness, and want of qualifications for so arduous and important a service, she was enabled to open the proposed institution, the month after her return from the Continent.

She was much concerned that the children committed to their care, might be preferved in innocence, and trained in the paths of piety and virtue; and when not called from home on religious fervice, laboured faithfully in advancing such measures as tended to promote the folid advantages of this institution.

On the subject of this school, there does not appear to be much remaining written by herself: a few of her letters have, however, been collected, expressive of her tenderness less she might interfere with other institutions; and of her cautious steppings in this concern; with divers other instructive sentiments; most of which have been extracted, and are as follows:

The prospect of removing to Ireland in any line, continues to my mind very awful; and undertaking a matter of so much consequence as the proposed school, is not less so: but if our friends whose judgments we esteem, feel uneasy with it, and freely express themselves, it will rather be a relief than a disappointment; especially as we have no intention of getting, or saving money by it to ourselves. If we are but savoured to see the work of our day, and sound saithful in the performance of it, though ever so humbling to sless and blood, I sometimes think, it is all that I desire.

I do not like the thoughts of crowding new inftitutions upon friends, imposing objects, or doing any thing which has the remotest appearance of opposing our own, or others' prospects, by dividing or scattering the little strength, which, if put together, might prove no more than sufficient for one undertaking at first; though afterwards, it might increase for whatever further openings might be perceived in the truth.

I have, at times, been much depressed with a fear of interfering with the school at Mountmellick, and discouraging the valuable friends engaged therein. I felt most easy to write them a few lines, with a view, as I tell them, "to open a door for a free communication of sentiments respecting what we both have in view;" expressing my love and esteem for them, and belief, that as both they and we are disinterested in our views, desirous of promoting the same cause, and rightly directed, we shall move, either separately or together, with a comfortable degree of unity and sympathy; and requesting their openness with me, in saying whether any thing has occured to them, on hearing of our plan, which would be any strength or encouragement to them, and which is in our power to afford; whether they wish us to be united in our undertakings, or think that two schools will answer; and laftly, whether they do not think it will be better for them steadily to pursue their own profpects, until our house is opened, (if ever it should be) and then to stand resigned, either to unite or keep separate, as at that time appears best. So much feemed a little relief to myself to fay, feeling great affection and tenderness towards them; at the fame time that my own faith is nearly tried. I, however, feel a hope as I am writing, that if our offering is not accepted, but proves like David's proposing to build the house, that, nevertheless, we fhall feel that fecret supporting language, " thou didft well, in that it was in thine heart, &c."

-Dost thou not wonder at the undertaking we have in view? My dear R. G. has kindly condescended to make ample preparations for a boarding school for girls, and has built a considerable addition to our present dwelling; which stands upon an island, in a navigable river called the Suir. It is about a hundred yards across, and near a quarter of a mile long; has on one fide of it, the quay and town, and on the other, cultivated mountains, which feem almost to hang over it. The prospect from the front of the house, is through the garden and a pasture, to the river and valley, and is terminated by a very high and rugged mountain, feveral miles distant. The place is altogether very commodious, and pleasant for the intended purpose; but how we shall meet with fuitable, fuitable, difinterested persons for undertaking the immediate care of the children, &c. is not clear; a hope however cheers us, that if our views are right, and deserving a blessing, all things needful will be afforded us in the needful time. I should like to have such, for almost every station in the family, as possess a sincere concern for the prosperity of the work, and find a dedication in their own hearts to it; being asraid of drawing any, merely to gratify ourselves, that have not some such sources of trial, which, generally, more or less, attend the most upright and disinterested designs.

——I have had a very low dull time of late about this undertaking, from a fear that we shall not be found equal to it. I do not mean, in the fight of men, for probably we could not please all, let us do ever so well; but I mean in the fight of Him whose blessing is more craved and panted after, than the most specious appearances it can wear.

Having formerly mentioned the discouragements of my mind in the setting out of the school we are engaged in, it is but just also to say, that things respecting it now wear a pleasanter aspect; with a hope that that which was sown in weakness, seems, through divine help, (for to that only it can be attributed) rising into greater strength. The minds of some of our precious charge are evidently encreasing in verdure, by the dew of heaven; and, in the general, innocence is to be felt from the insluence of their spirits.

Our helpers also grow (we hope) in the root of true religion. Indeed, did the world, or our religious and civil concerns with its inhabitants, speak no more trouble to us than what we find upon our little ifland, it would be too great a state of prosperity for human nature profitably to be indulged with; for even that calls for a watchfulness and industry, which the flesh is at enmity with, and which I fear being found wanting in. To feel an evidence that we are under the care and bleffing of the Shepherd and Bifhop of fouls, after conflicting doubtings respecting it, is such a cordial as reanimates the foul to fight the good fight of faith, and to lay hold on eternal life. In feafons of favour this has been the case; but it is hard to lay down all these precious gifts, still to walk as the mafter walked, to testify, by our dedication, that we believe he came to fave finners, and, as to the means whereby his glorious work is promoted, to fay, " not my will, but thine be done."

In the 12th month 1788, fhe engaged, with other friends, in a vifit to the meetings and families of friends, in the city of Cork: and during her employment in that fervice, the following letters appear to have been written. Though they do not express much account of the visit, yet they may be acceptable, from the instructive remarks they contain, and the weighty and concerned spirit which they manifest under this engagement.

^{——}We have been fleadily engaged with fitting in four families a day; and though we often feem

feem ready to give up, and feel like imprisoned spirits, yet, upon the whole, we have no just cause to be discouraged; best help being near to strengthen us with might in our inner man, or such a proportion of it as is necessary for the performance of, and perseverance in, the work of the present day. As doing the will of our heavenly Father, is the only thing really worth living for, I wish to consider it as an unmerited savour, to know what that will is, and to be furnished with any degree of capacity to do it.

The feason of the year, the closeness of the city, and the complicated occasions of heaviness and depression, in the view of the state of things here, all contribute to suffering, both of body and mind; so that were we clear of unprositably adding thereto, we do not lack a pretty full cup thereof. Indeed we have no business to seek for a portion or baptism, differing in nature from that which the great Pattern himself submitted to, and which the true seed here and elsewhere, have still, for wise purposes, to experience.

——Whether any good may come of our labour and travel here, must be left: it is the blessing only which can render this, and every other endeavour of the poor servants, effectual to the building up of any drooping member in the most holy faith. My soul has in the course of our visit to the families of friends in this city, passed by the gates of death. But the deceitfulness of my own heart is such, that it cannot be removed by pleasant things; nor does sitness for the little services we are engaged in, spring

fpring out of the most sensible and gratifying operations of the spirit; but out of these unsearchable baptisms, which, nevertheless, demonstrate they are of the Holy Ghost and fire, because they leave an empty temple, a temple ready to be filled with the presence wherein there is life. According to my finall knowledge of good, I may affert that, after all, the joy of the Lord is our strength; and were it not that, in the beginning of this vifit, my spirit had been fweetly confolated therewith, I very much doubt whether, from many of my feelings and deep provings fince, I should have held out until now: peradventure it possessed some of that sacred efficacy, which Elijah's forty days fustenance is distinguished for, and thereby, to the praise of that grace, by which I am what I am, my confidence has not wholly failed me in the deeps. - All that is within me prays, that as we have been mercifully strengthened to drink, in this place, a bitter cup, we may not, in our own wills, refuse any dregs which in infinite wisdom are intended, in part, to constitute the cup of falvation. But the flesh is weak! A few have refused us, and whether their hearts will relent, is yet to try. We cannot however but fympathize with a tried, afflicted remnant in this meeting, whose hands I do believe, will grow stronger and stronger, be more and more instructed to war, and their fingers to fight; for however the boafters over the pure lowly feed may exalt themselves, yet they cannot stand in the day of judgment, nor prevent the fulfilling of the promife, that the law shall be magnified and made honourable. I concluded to flay third day meeting; and though, as is often my lot, speaking to men did did not relieve my inward oppression, yet in prostration before the almighty Helper, who in abundant mercy is touched with a feeling of our infirmities, there was a secret sustaining evidence, of living again in His presence, whereby those bones that were broken did rejoice. Thus are the poor of the slock helped in their extremities, and encouraged to maintain their considence in the omnipotent gathering arm of Israel's Shepherd.

May we not be afraid of fuffering; for in this land however, they that dwell with the feed, must dwell in a low spot, and give up their names to reproach. "If ye were of the world, the world would love you, but because ye are not of the world, the world hates you: it hated me before it hated you." To be of this happy, though afflicted number, is more to be defired than to join ourselves in affinity with a spirit which, instead of suffering with the seed, wars against it, in the wrath and cruelty of the king of the locusts which came out of the pit; a spirit that cannot ftand in the day of judgment, but which, being airy and unfettled, leads from the quiet habitation, and leaves the mind without a stay. How excellent, yea how much to be defired is that state wherein, through holy chastisement and suffering for the feed's fake, that precious feal of adoption, the language of Abba Father, is feelingly obtained and breathed! This is indeed a Something in ourselves wherein we can rejoice, an unmerited gift which excludes all boafting, a prefervative from moving in the line of others' experience, further than it is made our own, or from from having our rejoicing in them. Were the active members of our fociety, more generally and individually gathered to this deep inward feeling of the life of truth, and the evidence of its operations in themselves, how much more effectual would their labours be, in building up one another in the most holy faith? I am afraid for myfelf; I long to be more truly weighty in my own spirit; not to assume a consequence among men, or to plume myself with borrowed feathers; but really to be preferved in company with the feed, and through its operations, to live, move, and have my being, in the church especially. A feries of deep exercifes has fallen to my lot, on account of the law and testimony of truth in this province, and near fympathy with fome who dare not let it fall to the ground, without discovering themselves, and on whose side they are. These find it to be a day of trial, of perplexity, and of treading down; and there are fo few, even among the well minded, who are skilful either in lamentation, or in war, that the work lies heavy on a few; and fometimes I am afraid, that the ointment made after the art of the apothecary, gets unpleafantly tinctured by the dead flies (the unquickened efforts for the cause) being cast into it.

Though I often find it my duty to wash and anoint, rather than appear to men to fast, yet the secret travail of my soul is sorrowful, and beset with many discouragements unknown but to itself, and its almighty Helper; and I find, that the more deep and hidden my exercises are, and the more I seek for strength to unite myself, in a covenant never to be broken, with the Beloved of my foul; the more I am capable to distinguish the confolations of the Spirit, the pure unerring Spirit, from every inferior or corrupt source of gratification to the natural senses. I know my experience of this is but very small, and yet, as far as I have attained, I have abundant cause to admire the wisdom there is in the paths of true abasedness and self-denial; yea, the fortress they lead to, and the safety there is in them.

Never are we favoured with a clearer perception of our religious duty, in little as well as greater things, than when our spiritual eye has been purged, by the ministration of some baptism that has afflictingly removed every film of self-love; which discovers itself by an over-attention to our own reputation, to the ease of the slesh, and a desire for pleasant things in spirituals as well as temporals. Ah! may we think nothing too near or too dear to part with, for the secret acceptance of the Beloved! The very putting forth of his hand, as through the hole of the door, little as the intimation may seem, is a powerful call to admit him in the way of his coming, however it may oppose our own way.

She attended the half year's national meeting at Dublin in the 5th month 1789; and from thence went to York, where she made her relations and friends a short visit, and proceeded pretty directly for the yearly meeting at London; which she attended, and returned home with an evidence, that, in this journey, she had been occupied in her proper place. This is agreeably testified by the following letter, which is the only one that has appeared on this occasion.

Our little flock looks pleafant and healthy. Our joy was mutual at meeting yesterday, and home is felt by us to be a peaceful retreat. In a little sitting which we had at home in the evening, there seemed some ability to lie down as beside the still waters; a consoling experience: and on looking back upon our late journey, though there was no great professed draft to it, a hope arises, that, consistent with our religious duty, we were going on with the work of the day.

In the latter part of the year 1789, she felt her mind drawn to have some publick meetings in divers places, where none of our society dwell, particularly at the town and garrison of Kinsale; where, as well as at other places, these services tended to open, and spread the knowledge of the truth. Concerning her visit to the abovementioned place, she writes thus:

—In much fear, and I trust humiliation of spirit, I have been to the town of Kinsale, and suffered to have appointed, through an apprehension of duty, a publick meeting there. It was large, nearly as much so as the house belonging to the society would admit. There appeared to be about two hundred people, who generally behaved with decency and solidity, and the meeting was owned with the gathering influence of Israel's Shepherd; which, in time of silence, was I thought comfortably experienced. We also paid a visit to the fort, and particularly ticularly to a large company of deferters, who are collected there for transportation, many of them good looking young men; and I also ventured to remind some of the officers, of their religious and civil duties. It was altogether a service much in the cross, and deserving of no reward, for want of timely resignation to it: but, in unmerited mercy, I was favoured with a peaceful calm, which my beloved companions also enjoyed, and earned with honest labour.

She was, indeed, much concerned, and laboured in her measure, for the propagation of that holy principle, which is the light, and life of men; and she counted nothing too dear to give up, or part with, for the promotion of this pure word in their hearts. A renewed evidence of this appears, in a fresh instance of dedication to a very trying and arduous fervice. During her late travels on the Continent, her mind had often fympathized in fecret, and been united in gospel love, with a precious feed scattered up and down in those parts; but which, it feemed not then the appointed feafon to visit in person. This time now approached, and, as she apprehended, in the openings of divine wifdom; fo that she believed it her indispensable duty, to give herfelf up, in pure refignation, to this fervice; which appeared in her view, to comprehend a visit to Dunkirk, Holland, Pyrmont, and some other parts of Germany. Under the weight of this important concern, she experienced the near sympathy of friends of the monthly and quarterly meetings to which she belonged, with those of the national meeting in Dublin, and yearly felect meeting in London; who concurred in testimonials of their unity and approbation. Thus strengthened by the feelings and concurrence of the church, and by a similar concern of her friend George Dillwyn, she set forward to engage in the work before them, in the 6th month 1790; accompanied also by her husband and Sarah Dillwyn, who selt their minds engaged to enter with them on this journey.

Her letters written under the prospect of this vifit, during the progress of it, and upon its conclusion, appear to form, in general, so regular and connected an account of it, that nothing further appears necessary, than to lay the extracts from them before the reader.

2d month 1790. I feem very like one who hath no resting place on earth, or any consolations here in which I dare to trust; but if I am found worthy, in the fmallest degree, to refemble the great and holy High Priest of our profession, it is enough. As to the performance of great works, I look not for it; my mind is taught to believe that I have no right thereto, or reason to expect that an inftrument fo feeble, and fo little a time in use, is likely to be owned, in any extraordinary degree, in the discharge of my small part of the great work. But my spirit hath often been dipt into sympathy inexpressible, with a feed in those parts, of which I have not yet attained the outward discovery, and peradventure, this fecond visit may prove like fishing, and catching nothing. This I defire to leave, and to attain to a daily and fimple reliance upon unerring unerring direction, which the creature knows must be attended with a dying daily.

2d month 1790. We stand in need of care, both of our own, and that of our friends; our endeavours for peace being, in many respects, in a line rather new and important, and in which we defire to be preferved from moving further, than the good Shepherd leads and goes before.-It has not been without a portion of deep exercise, and frequent baptisms, known only to the Searcher of hearts, that I have obtained fo much strength as to cast my burden for a time upon the church; and fince they have taken it, and I believe fome of them felt it, my relief has, beyond my expectation, been effected.—But this is temporary. I know, in a spiritual fense at least, that bonds and afflictions await me; yet with thankfulness may acknowledge, that, feeling the everlasting arms to be underneath, none of these things at present move me. - My capacity to promote the work of righteousness on the earth, is very finall; but according to that capacity, I long to be found faithful, not counting my life dear unto myself.—I have not heard of any companion in the little services before me, nor do I feel any anxiety on that head; believing that, if the concern is right, fuitable fellow labourers will be provided, without any toiling interference of mine.

3d month 1790. May my mind be preferved in stability to the end: for that I both watch and pray, well knowing that when I lose that, it must be distinguished mercy indeed, that preserves my poor little vessel from total wreck. As a very hard gale of even fair wind may occasion great danger, fo I perceive that the urgency I feel, at times, in my spirit, to do the Master's apprehended will, may render frustrate the gracious design, if ballast be not on board. I never felt my mind so sensibly sustained in the prospect of any journey before. I esteem it an unmerited mark of the great Shepherd's condescending care, who hath, blessed be his Name, richly replenished my soul with faith, and so abundantly ministered its sister virtue, patience, that my frail tabernacle being at times overcome, the language of my heart is similar to that of the Spouse; "Stay me with slaggons, comfort me with apples, for I am sick of love."

This is a dispensation which I do not expect to continue; for when a testimony of this love is called for, when difficulties are to be encountered, both within and without, when we are to be offered up a facrifice in the fervice of the christian faith, oh how inconstant is the human heart! how many fubftitutes for obedience, how many fubterfuges does it find! Remembering these things, the wormwood and the gall, yea the anguishing exercises attendant on our late journey, my heart is humbled within me, and preserved from expecting the journey in prospect to be unmixed with fimilar trials; or even to fee in it, gratifying demonstrations of that glorious work, which, in gospel vision, is beheld to be begun in the German Empire, and many other parts of the globe less known to us. On any prefumption of this fort, I have not dared to take one step; but have much defired that my spirit may be deep enough, according to my meafure, fure, to fuffer and rejoice only with the pure feed, whether obviously the fig-tree blossom, and fruit be on the vine, or not.

-On fecond day morning, at the yearly meeting of ministers and elders held in London the 17th of the 5th month, our certificates were read; which, far beyond what I durst have looked for, created expressions of gospel unity and church encouragement, that were not entirely unfeafonable to my mind; feeling myself as poor as seemed possible for spiritual existence. But what also greatly contributed to lift up my head above the overflowing billows, and fay to the winds and the waves, " Be still," was the indisputable evidence, that the Master had feparated for a fimilar work, my beloved friend, George Dillwyn; under which his oppressed mind was constrained publickly to acknowledge, to his own and others relief, that he believed it to be his duty to go with us. How precious is that help, which is dispensed in better wisdom than our own! and being the fruit of mercy, it is often referved for the moment of extremity. It was a very folemn uniting feafon; the spirit and the bride (the church) appeared cordially to unite in the fame language of encouragement. I greatly defire a heart capable of humbly and reverently returning acceptable obedience for these favours, in the few feeble steppings through my future pilgrimage. Trials I have learned to expect, having a disposition that will not suffer me to be exempt, until it becomes lost in the ocean of gospel love. In ourselves, as in the world, there is trouble; oh that our acquaintance may become more and more I 3 intimate intimate with Him, in whom is the fulness of undefiled peace! Then may we rejoice in every tribulation, which has urged us to lay hold on eternal fubftance. No female companion appearing, our former valuable fellow fraveller, Sarah Dillwyn, was naturally looked to, and no obstructions occurring, Ratcliffe monthly meeting (of which the is a member) cordially testified its approbation therewith, and granted her a certificate. Thus we four being banded, left London (Joshua Beale accompanying us) on the feventh day after the yearly meeting. There we met with many friends like bone of our bone, and flesh of our flesh; yea, so cemented have fome of us at times felt, as fully to convince us that it was the work of both grace and nature; the latter of which, in our many feparations, is learning I trust to be more and more fubject, and to furrender its will to the divine will, which indeed fweetens many bitter cups, and ftrengthens us to fay amen to every requiring of truth. Without this experience, how are we like bullocks unaccustomed to the yoke! The yearly meeting was large, and satisfactory in a good degree; but fuch affemblies, composed of minds so various, have generally a confiderable portion of exercise and weight for the feeling part of its members; and it is an unspeakable favour that there are such preserved in the church, whose spititual faculties are fo alive, that, like watchers on the walls of Zion, they can give an alarm at the new and various attacks, which our common and unwearied enemy is making upon truth's ramparts: and it is also a distinguishable mercy in our poor fociety, that there are, among the younger part of it, fuch as, by the liveliness and faithfulness of their spirits, promise a succession of standard-bearers.

We were at Rochester on first day, at the monthly meeting at Canterbury on third, and got to Dover that evening; from whence we failed next day for Dunkirk, and had a fine, but flow passage, being on the water sixteen hours. Here we found John De Marfillac waiting for us; and Joshua Beale, also uniting himself to us, we became fix in number. The day we arrived, was their week day meeting; and it may with thankfulnefs be acknowledged, that it was mercifully owned with divine refreshment, and the communication of counsel from the living spring thereof. And what tended to heighten our joy, on fitting down with the friends here, was the scene which we had beheld just before. What they call the host was carried about, with fuch a procession of the army, corporation, clergy, and little children, as I never faw before, or could have supposed; there being many thousands both of people, and images of filver, pewter, and wood; hundreds of candles near fix feet long; abundance of rich filk and other vestments; barefooted and shaven headed friars; musick, drums, &c. cannon firing, and bells ringing. So that, after all this stir, to sit down with our friends, under our own vines and fig-trees, and measurably to partake of substantial food, was truly joyous; and more especially so, under the belief that the one shall decrease, and the other increase. We spent a full week at Dunkirk, to a good degree of fatisfaction, perceiving the bleffing I 4 that those new settlers may be in that land, and at this important juncture, if they wisely keep to, and are graciously kept by, the preserving unchangeable principle of truth. They are at present worth visiting, and their number is likely soon to be increased from Nantucket.

After having four publick meetings in Dunkirk; (at all which divers not of our fociety attended) and feveral private ones, we proceeded to Oftend, (B. R. going with us) here we spent a day to fatisfaction, finding a man and his wife from London belonging to the fociety, who had not feen any reputable friends for feven or eight years. Though they had the marks of being, in some degree, robbed and spoiled, yet there was also something in them to visit, and which accepted the testimony of truth, as far as related to themselves. Divers books were also scattered, and not without a hope that the bleffing accompanied fome of them; for even in this little fervice, there is a great difference in our feelings. It is often like casting bread upon the waters, and, fometimes, without hope of return in any day or age. From Oftend we continued our course along the coast, by way of Bruges, Flushing, and Middleburgh; at the two latter of which, we folemnly paufed, and also exposed ourfelves to the observation and acquaintance of the people; intimating to some our errand, and making inquiry for fuch as were feeking the truth. fome fmall exception, they appeared to be in their ftrong holds, and fenced cities, intent upon this world's gain, which is, with too much propriety, called their god. However, a few books were left among them:

them; and finding the fon of a friend at Middleburgh, we had an opportunity of religious retirement with him, and of dropping fuch counsel as opened therein. He appeared, by his acknowledgement and attention to us, to accept the vifit kindly; but his fituation is exceedingly unfafe. From Middleburgh we went to a little port, called Campveer, and there hired a veffel to take us to Rotterdam. We had a very pleasant passage, our minds being favoured with much tranquillity; and after a thirty hours fail, arrived at our port, the 18th of the 6th month; where, as we expected, we entered into a fresh trial of fidelity to the precious cause. Here we staid three days, visited some former acquaintances, who were very kind; and commenced new ones with fuch as feemed to understand how to receive disciples in the name of disciples. To one or two of this class, our minds were particularly united. Being there on a first day, we had two publick meetings, both confiderably attended, but especially the latter, which was also a truly solemn and profitable opportunity. Between Dunkirk and Rotterdam, we had divers opportunities of diffeminating the knowledge of the principle of truth, by the distribution of books, and some conferences in a private way; but had no publick meeting, though our minds were in feveral places, brought under a confiderable weight of exercise; which seemed to answer no more end, than the people's walking round the walls of Jericho; and were it not that we are convinced, even from outward observation, that the Lord is at work in the kingdoms of men, and making a way for his own feed, we might conclude, that the fortifications which this world's spirit hath.

erected, particularly in Holland, will hardly ever be taken down. We went pretty directly from Rotterdam to Amfterdam, where we had our share of secret dippings and discouragements; but not expecting great things in our setting out, or desiring to be borne up above a seeling of what we are, and the oppression and obscurity of the true seed, we are the less exposed to a spirit of dismay; and engaged at times, in simplicity, to set down together, professedly to wait for the guidance of truth, or a discovery that the cloud rests upon the tabernacle. In these seasons, we have been strengthened, and cemented in best unity, and also encouraged to hold on in a path to be trodden more by faith, than sight.

In the publick meetings, of which we have attended three, we experienced painful exercise; and yet I thought on first day, that both the sittings were, upon the whole, folid and lively. We received accounts of our brother, Joseph Grubb, being in a very declining frate of health, which had made its appearance before we left home; and being in partnership with my Robert Grubb, and the care of business forbidden to my brother, my husband thought it his duty to offer him all the relief he could; a tranquil mind respecting outward. things, being of unspeakable consequence to the latter part of a man's life: this, without any anxiety about our own property, and a presentiment before we left home, that he would hardly go through the journey, induced us, though much in the crofs, to separate. We were detained at Amsterdam longer than we expected; one occasion of which was the printing of some extracts from Hugh Turford's writings, with an addition from Mary Brook on filent waiting, which some of our company translated into French. It contains very suitable matter for the present age, and is an acceptable publication to J. M. and B. R. to distribute in France, and also convenient to us in this journey, as many understand French. We have a large stock of other books, very eligible for our purpose, which the meeting for sufferings has given us for distribution. The 6th of the 7th month we came to Utrecht, where J. M. being tender took cold, and was confined next day to the house; and as he did not ail a great deal, it fuited our plan of spending one day quietly together, before we parted, he and B. R. having concluded to go from hence to Dunkirk, and J. M. from that place to his home. This has been a trial to us, but knowing J. M's attention to best direction, and also his defire, if right, of keeping with us, we dared not to perfuade him to fuit our inclinations and convenience; and therefore, after enjoying each others company, in fweet fellowship and tenderness of spirit, we parted; our little band then confifting of George and Sarah Dillwyn, J. B. and myfelf, with the most arduous part of the journey in prospect. Perhaps this stripping of outward help is wifely dispensed to us: in that light we view it, and dare not difpute divine fufficiency. Soon after our friends were gone, we concluded to pay a vifit to a family of Amsterdam, (with which we were acquainted when there before) who now refide at their country house about half way from that city to Utrecht; and accordingly

accordingly fet off, and arrived about five, and were received more like near relations united on the best ground, than as people of another nation and profession. We also met here two women of confiderable account on a vifit; to one of them particularly, our minds were nearly drawn, and the little instruction which was in our power to communicate, from the exercise of our minds, broken French, and the use of the scriptures, to particular passages of which we directed them as they occurred, was received with a religious fenfibility, which greatly united us together, and which words cannot fully fet forth.* Though we often lament

* Some time afterwards, she wrote the following letter to one of the women of that family. Remembering thy request to hear from our little company when we returned from Germany, and being now so near you, I felt an inclination to tell thee, and thy valuable brother and fifter, that, through the merciful direction and care of providence, we have got along to a good degree of fatisfaction, and been favoured, upon the whole, with a moderate share of health. We pursued our journey from Utrecht, by way of Arnheim and Munster, to Pyrmont; there we staid two weeks, and then went to Rinteln, Minden, Ofnabruck, and Bilefeld, and fo, by way of Munster, to Crevelt, Dusseldorf, Mulheim on the Rhine, Elberfelt, and from thence to Cleves. We found a few in many of these places, who, being weary of the ceremonial part of religion, are defiring its living fubstance, and to be true worshippers in spirit. These have many difficulties from within and without; but if they depend, fingly, upon divine help, and cease to recommend themselves by their own dead works, we have a hope, that they will gradually retire from the confusion of the carnal mind, to the true sheepfold. Were the professors of christianity more generally acquainted with the undefiled rest, which the redeemed our ignorance of the language of this people, and its attendant inconveniencies, yet I was never more convinced of the influence of truth qualifying to fpeak to one another in our own tongues, though utterly incapable in any other language, than that of the spirit; for in the present case, we were not fensible of either us, or the cause, suffering under our apparent difadvantages. We cannot always judge why we are fo led, and why fo destitute of fome outward accommodations to the fervice, which human prudence would naturally point out; but I may acknowledge that, on this account, I never was more contented and supported in an humble trust, that the good and Almighty Hand is with us in "these mortifying labours." We left Utrecht on feventh day morning, and came to Wageninge, which is an agreeable little town. The inhabitants were greatly furprifed at feeing us, but became uncommonly civil and courteous; in part owing to a man who drove us from Utrecht, who by some means, unknown to us, conceived so favourable an opinion of us, and feemed furnished with mind is strengthened to gather to, they would detect the fallacy of unfanctified forms and ministry, and rejoicingly receive the eternal Witness for God in themselves, for their Lawgiver, Friend, and Comforter.

We reflect with fatisfaction upon our visit to Middle-waart; not only in remembrance of your affectionate hospitality, but also of the uniting virtue of truth upon our minds, which left a pleasant savour after we separated; and now reviving, with renewed desire for all our preservation, and increasing intimacy with the good Shepherd of his sheep, I salute thee, my dear friend, in sisterly affection.

S. G.

with fuch materials for description, that where-ever we ftopt, he was fure to influence the people in our favour, and they united in testimonies of affection and kindness. We spent all first day in Wageninge; had a little, but folemn and refreshing meeting of our own company, and had also the company of a young Priest of good character. He and George Dillwyn conversed (I believe intelligibly) upon some important subjects in French, though perhaps neither of them were fully acquainted with the language; but the best sense being present, that defect was made up thereby.

We left a few fuitable books with them, which were very kindly accepted; and our parting was with apparent fentiments of affectionate efteem. We also gave books to divers others, and had a fatisfaction in fpending this little time among a kind, fimple hearted people. The people of the inn are particularly of this description, their conduct manifesting a pleasure which they had in entertaining us. These comfortable spots and feelings, fomewhat refemble Elijah's food, on the strength of which he had to travel many days. As neither the great work, nor the capacity to do it, is ours, fo we may be emboldened to hope, that our acceptance will fand in proportion to our obedience to that we have, rather than to that we have not. From Wageninge we came to Arnheim, where we fpent one day agreeably, were at the house of very civil people; and though we did not commence much acquaintance, yet were fatiffied with our little detention there, and to one or other left feveral books. Here we met with a kind man who speaks English well, says he was seasonably, and effectually ferved by a friend in England,

when

when he was a stranger there; and this is (no doubt) an additional inducement to lay himself out to oblige us, which he does with the appearance of much fincerity. These journies, I sometimes hope, will in future open my heart with more cordiality to strangers; for "knowing the heart of a stranger," a deficiency herein would be doubly culpable. The next place we went to was Doefburgh, where our feelings were rather unusually pleasant; but we did not find any stop thereby in our progress. The landlady at the inn where we stopped, appeared and approved herself to be far from the common fort, for dignity of manners and folidity, if not religious weightiness of mind. Her conduct to us was truly friendly, manifesting an affection and liberality becoming other parts of her character. We gave her a Barclay's Apology in Dutch, and feveral books in French, which she appeared fully qualified to read, and in a good degree to understand: she wanted much to pay for them, but on any terms was glad to receive them; and after looking over the fummary, promifed to lend them among fome of her neighbours. Germany is a country very unlike the Netherlands, both in the face of it, and in the manners of its inhabitants; the people being kept in a state of greater servility under princes of small territories. Our difficulties in the way of travelling commenced when we left Holland; for after gliding along in Treckschutes, upon their quiet waters, we got into waggons, the best publick conveyances the country afforded, and the roads being extremely bad, we were jolted to a degree not easy to suppose; and for want of knowing the language, were imposed upon, and induced to take our passage in the post waggon, understanding that we should have it to ourselves, arrive seasonably at our lodgings the two nights in prospect, and have time enough for rest. But instead of these fine things, after they got our money, a Capuchin Friar, and a very ill looking man, were put in with us, and we kept in this fituation, with two meals wanting, through a dark rainy night (the wet coming in upon us) until three o'clock the next morning; when, after two hours rest, we were summoned again, and without stopping to take any meals, fave our dinners, travelled on until we arrived, about one o'clock next morning, at the gates of Munster, a fortified city; where we had to wait for an entrance more than half an hour; and then had to find our lodgings among a people of a strange language, whose principal object was to get from us all they could. This is a hint of the manner in which we got along, and I mention it to shew the inconvenience strangers are subject to, and how different the fare of these countries is from that of England; at the fame time an acknowledgement of providential care is abundantly due from us. Our minds, during this extraordinary trial of body and spirits, were remarkably sustained with cheerful tranquillity, and an abounding defire to comfort one another in this painful imprisonment. We were also preserved at the time from suffering in our health, and found that part of two days rest in Munster, recruited us finely.

Our stay in that city was very satisfactory, finding it to be a place of considerable openness. One man in particular, a professor of languages in the university university, who was sick, received our men with brotherly affection and joy, had very fatisfactory conversation with them, and was glad to receive divers of our books, some of which he intended to put into their publick library. He told them of a relation of his, in a part of Germany where we have not been, who is fully convinced of our principles, but who has not dared openly to avow them; and faid, that in some other parts, there are many fuch, which we have fince found to be the case. A serious young nobleman, a pupil of his, intending to take a tour to England, was defirous of being recommended to fome friend in London, in which George Dillwyn gratified him. Many other opportunities occurred of casting books into the hands of ferious people, and in an imperfect way intimating to them fuch truths, as at that time we were furnished with. From Munster we came by way of Warrendorf, Padderborn, &c. through Westphalia, to Pyrmont, which we reached the 23d of the 7th month. Here our minds were foon comforted in the belief, that there is a feed in these parts, which, however hidden from the world, and the many churches professing the christian name, are preffing after an establishment on the right foundation. Our minds were greatly favoured with peaceful ferenity, and a steady reliance on providential care; fo that instead of difficulties depressing, they rather animated our spirits to press forward, towards the fulfilling of our allotted portion of travail and exercise, and to bear up one another, according to our ability, through all. Neverthelefs, there have been feafons when Satan did not fail to fuggest to the weakness of my mind, that we were running in vain. But to all our humbling encouragement, after we arrived at Pyrmont. and particularly in the fecond meeting there, among a fimple hearted, feeking people, we were convinced that it was not fo, and that infinite kindness would also preferve us from labouring in vain. It was an opportunity wherein (to the praise of the grace which we depend upon) we may fay, that, for a time, "the feed reigned over all." Visitors and visited experienced it to be a season of uncommon contrition, and during the extension of the holy Wing, our spirits seemed gathered into perfect unity; fo efficacious is divine life and love! It appears that two years ago, there were about twenty in Pyrmont, who being uneafy with the dead formality of many professors, met together in their own houses, sometimes reading, finging, or praying, as they apprehended most right. They underwent confiderable perfecution on this account from the avaricious priests, who perfuaded people not to do business with them; and being generally low in the world, they suffered in this refpect; but it appears that they were not hindered thereby from meeting together: yet their rest, not being a pure one, was broken up; fome of them finding their reformation from what they faw to be wrong, was very fmall, concluded there was fomething more substantial than what they had yet experienced; and this being suggested to the rest, occasioned a division among them. A few returned to the profession they had left, and the others ceafed to meet together; yet it is wonderful to fee the brotherly kindness which distinguishes them from others. They call themselves friends, and with much much propriety, to each other. We spent about two weeks in Pyrmont, with fatisfaction of mind. For three rooms, three beds, fire, candles, and the use of the kitchen, we paid 15s. per week, found our own provisions, cooked them ourselves, with the affiftance of a girl, and an elderly man, one of the friends who spoke English pretty well. He marketed for us, interpreted on more important occasions, and ferved us with great folidity and cheerfulness. In many respects, we felt as if we were at home, though among a people, few of whom knew what we faid; but they told us by figns, that they felt that which was better than words, and which required none to fet it forth: O! that we may be preferred in, and feel more and more bound to, our own line and measure of duty; that as the work is the Lord's, the management of it may also be in his wisdom, and tend to his glory; and then no matter how low and abafed the creature becomes. During our stay at Pyrmont, we had many meetings, some of which were uncommonly contriting opportunities, wherein their doubts feemed to subside, and the virtue of truth to fweeten and refresh their weary spirits.* In many respects they are weak, and yet so sincerely desirous to obtain " the one thing needful," that we entertain a hope, that fome of them will increase in steadfastness to what they know to be right. Our minds are often involved in discouragement and conflict: the weakness of our frames, and perhaps the

* At one meeting we had the company of four men, who walked the day before near twenty miles, to fit with us; and that of another man, who came about forty, also on foot.

the prospect of the unfinished part of the work, may be the occasion of these. But let us remember, that until they are overcome by the power of victorious faith, it is our feed time rather than harvest, and therefore we are called upon, by merciful and heart-folacing intimations, to fow in hope. Whether any apparent fruits ever appear from this journey, we feem comfortably fatisfied at times, that it will not be loft in the unlimited family of the one universal Parent; and if we are but favoured to keep the word of his patience, fo as to hold out to the end, and return without condemnation, it will not be lost to us. We fet off from Pyrmont for Rinteln upon a different plan from that on which we had travelled before; for having a man to do little fervices for us when there, who is one of their friends, and speaks English well, we faw an extraordinary convenience would attend our taking him with us; and therefore have taken a light waggon, and a pair of horses, which saves us imposition and trouble in procuring carriages, &c.

Our man conducts himself with great propriety and simplicity, as our friend, guide, interpreter, and servant; being charioteer, and doing a great deal for us besides. We spent a week at Rinteln, and had several meetings among them, besides private religious opportunities, in several of their families, and left some of our books for a university in that town. In our way here, we came through a skirt of Hanover, where we beheld, in the improvements of the country, and the appearance of the people, a cheering resemblance of England. About Rinteln, there are near twenty of those who call themselves friends, and some of them we believe to be lively spirited people, and confiderably experienced in the inward work of religion; of whom we have a comfortable hope, whether they are ever known to our gathered, vifible church, or not. We are now in this country under a frequent sense of inward poverty, and with many confirmations that, of ourselves, we can do nothing; yet trusting that best wisdom has turned us into this little field of labour, we dare not, with our present feelings, desert it; but we go on from fpot to fpot, as we apprehend is most in the line of our duty. From Rinteln we proceeden to Minden, where we found a little company of fincere hearted, and exercised christian travellers, who appeared glad of our vifit, and expressed a belief that it was in divine appointment for their good. They feemed more defirous for a right opening to fit down together in filent waiting, than to enter into conversation about what they had already experienced. We had feveral folid, and I hope edifying, meetings among them, to which feveral came from the country many miles on foot, which demonstrated their earnestness to be helped on in the right way; among thefe was a blind woman who gets her living by fpinning, and who walked seventeen miles to meet us. She is an example of christian fortitude, and true nobility; for on our asking her, if she was not under difficulties in procuring herfelf a living, she gratefully answered, that her friends fometimes helped her, that she knew she was poor, but when she reslected upon her fupplies, and the query revived in her mind, "if she lacked any thing," the acknowledgement always succeeded, " nothing, Lord." She told us. with great humility and tenderness, that her knowledge of the truth was not obtained by books or outward means, but by the operation of the divine principle in her own heart. I hope we have been preserved, thus far, from drawing the inward attention of those whom we have visited, to ourselves, or attaching them in the affectionate part to any representation of good. The fecret, sympathetic exercise which we have felt on their account, and in company with them, hath, I do believe, brought us all at times, to the renewed discovery of the everlasting foundation; and we have a hope that some of these will acceptably build thereon. We here met with great civility, and tenderness of spirit, from a counsellor and director of this place; but the cross is a mighty stumbling block; he often makes me think of Nicodemus: when we left the town, he kindly went before us to an inn on the road, where he had provided coffee, and convened feveral of the friends to take their last leave; a parting which I hope was attended with true folemnity, as well as brokenness of spirit. With tears he expressed his desire, that He who faid he would be with his disciples to the end of the world, would go with us, and blefs his own work. Next day we travelled towards Buer, and dined fweetly in a field, on provision which we took with us, whilst our horses were eating corn. We then turned a little out of the road, to visit a man and his wife, whom the Priest is persecuting for absenting themselves from his place of worship. He has got the Magistrate to fine them near twenty shillings, (which is a great deal for them) and they refusing to pay it, from an apprehension of duty, have fuffered diftress of their goods, with christian simplicity and firmness. After spending near two hours with them (I hope to our and their edification) we came on to Buer. In the neighbourhood of this town live a little company of Zion's travellers, with whom we had a meeting; and our gracious Helper being near, by his good spirit, rendered it an humbling and refreshing opportunity. We have many encampments, and when we shall get through this wilderness, is very uncertain; for my part, I fee no way yet! This blindness is, probably, to try my patience, of which I feem, at times, to have a reducing stock; but am fecretly supported, in knowing Him in whom I have, through holy help, believed. We have great cause to be humbly thankful, for that portion of fure direction and ability, which, for our instruction as well as comfort, have been revealed in the midst of our weakness, and become as a table in the wilderness, furnished with food wifely adapted to the necessities of weary and hungry travellers. It feems very fingular, when I recollect myfelf, that we are keeping house in Prusfia, and confiderably united to some of its inhabitants, who were lately entire strangers; and, in degree, feel as if we were at home, though fo far from that which is called home. It is a little like being in a new world, yet fo near the old one, as to be distinguished for similar evils, and that fashion which passeth away, when truth, which is strongest of all, takes its possessions. It is very pleasant in these journeys to feel this fentiment lively upon our spirits, "the earth is the Lord's," &c. We went from Buer to Ofnabruck

the 26th of the 8th month, where we spent several days under confiderable exercise of mind, and not finding that our vifit was likely to be attended with any use, and being also fatigued various ways, we were fo difcouraged, that we were about concluding to leave the town next day, though we thought the way to it had opened as clearly as to most places we had been at; but on feeling further about it, we thought it fafest to try a little longer, and not move in the dark. Our fituation was unfavourable, being at a Roman Catholick Inn where the Protestants are afraid to come, and our Friend and interpreter having no acquaintance in the place. Thus we continued until feventh day evening, without any thing fatisfactory occurring, except giving a few fummaries * to fome shopkeepers on whom we had called, and having the company of a young woman who had inquired concerning us, and discovered a serious desire to be with us, and to have some of our books: she appeared to us to be possessed of much sweetness, and valuable fenfibility. On feventh day evening, our men called upon the merchant, on whom they had a letter of credit, who speaks English well, behaved with great kindness, and soon apprehending their errand, (having fome knowledge of the fociety in England) went with them to an overfeer of part of his business, who was a religious man, and discontented with the ceremonious part of the world's worship. They found this person a little fhy at first, but he soon opened to them with simplicity, and discovered himself to be a man who was awakened to a profitable fense of his own state, and to a fincere defire to be led in divine counsel, to greater acceptance than the shadows of things could yield him. He came with them to the inn, and we fpent the evening agreeably together. He told us of a few more in the town of his fentiments, who met together every first day evening, to read, &c. and on being asked, if they would be willing to fit with us after our manner, he expressed his own inclination fo to do; and after inquiring of others, told us next morning, that it was agreeable to them all. In the morning, we were furprised and comforted with the fight of a very folid feeling young woman from Buer, in the capacity of a fervant, who had walked fifteen miles to meet us, in consequence of a secret draft in her own mind, without having any reason to expect, from what had passed, that we should be at Osnabruck fo long. After getting her fome refreshment, we fix fat down together, and had a strengthening opportunity, wherein dear George Dillwyn ministered to us. At four in the afternoon, we had a meeting with about eight more, among whom was an officer, who behaved folidly. It was a time of favour, and I believe deep instruction to some there, who had not before feen the necessity of ceasing from their own works, and depending only upon the renewal of divine life in the foul, for qualifications rightly to worship. After meeting we paid a visit to one of their friends who was fick, with whom we were led into fympathy and filence, and to whom we imparted fuch counsel as truth unfolded at that time. These were relieving circumstances to us, and set us at liberty, comfortably to depart on fecond day morning for Hertford or Herwerden. We therefore fet off with the prospect of a pretty easy day's journey, but found the road very rough, and in many places dangerous, and more of it than we expected; fo that we were grievously jolted, and out until near ten at night, very contrary to our inclination; for we tried much to get lodgings in a town a few miles off, but the people would not take us in. We appear very strange to many here, but so different to a few who are acquainted with the truth, that the distinction of countries seems almost lost, and proves the cementing virtue of religion. At Hertford we were vifited by two religious men, who come under the description of those called friends in these parts; and they were encouraged to faithfulness. Our men also visited a lawyer, who being discontented with the usual ceremonies of religion, &c. keeps much to himself. Next morning as we were at breakfast, proposing to depart, there came two men from different parts, who had walked many miles through the rain to meet us. One of these men, fome time ago, refused to be married by the Priest, in which, and in other things, he bore a steady testimony, under perfecution, against an hireling ministry. The openness, kindness and folidity of his manners and countenance, were pleafant to us; and being evidently acquainted with filent waiting, we had a folemn instructive opportunity together. From Hertford, we proceeded to Bilefeld, a town where, and in its neighbourhood, there are many religious people, and particularly agreeable as to the outward; but it was a vifit attended with as deep baptism, and continual travail of spirit, as we have experienced in any place that we have been in; which, with the providential openings, and ftrength to visit the precious seed in the needful time, tended to convince us that we were in the way of our duty; a most cheering evidence, in this dreary wilderness, and a full reward for all our little toils. At this place there are some who live separate from all publick profession, who under an apprehension of being turned out of the way, were afraid, for a while, to give us any of their company: but being also afraid to let the opportunity slip, we were invited to one of their houses, to confer with several of them on fuch subjects as might occur, in order to know a little of each other. Both fides were fomewhat furprifed to find fo much fimilarity of fentiment, respecting the ground and testimonies of truth. They told us, that if there were a people there, who ceased from all forms or activity of their own, and fat down in fimple dependance upon the operation of the heavenly gift, they would embrace them with brotherly affection, and rejoice to unite with them herein; but they were loath to believe, that they two or three might be required to bear fuch a publick testimony; nor were they willing to unite with us in fo doing, for fear of the people whose eyes are much upon them. They are people of confiderable account, and are very fearful of drawing the lower class of their neighbours to themselves; and being of Nicodemus's class, like better to obtain and enjoy, their religious knowledge in private. We had, nevertheless, several opportunities of solid conference together; which were attended with great unanimity and cordiality; the last of which was particularly owned with the circulation of divine virtue, and with strength fully to relieve our minds towards them. We were very kindly invited to the house of a merchant, who appears to be a very fincere man. We paid him and his daughter a morning visit; but they were not content with that, and therefore pressed us to spend first day evening with them. In the morning of that day, we fat together in the inn, where we had the company of an honest man, who came on foot fixteen miles to be at meeting with us, and also of four others, of the town. In the afternoon, as J. B. was taking a folitary walk, he was met by a ferious man, who defired his company to a house a little way out of the town; he complied with his invitation, and when they got there, they found fourteen people met together, for the fake of religious improvement, who foon made their request that we would all go and fit with them. I was laid down, in a tried fituation of mind, when J. B. brought the invitation which had in it fo much of the right favour, that we embraced it, and immediately fet off, having above an English mile to walk. By the time we got there, they were about twenty in number. We foon fettled down into a filence truly folemn, which lasted a considerable time without interruption of any kind; and when the channel of instrumental ministry opened, the precious life mercifully continued, and our parting was under its tendering impressions. This circumstance, of dropping in with a people of whom we had had no intelligence, and with whom we contracted no further acquaintance, with the fenfible feeling of divine care over those who are as sheep having no shepherd, herd, affords altogether a fweet and pleafant reflection; accompanied by this encouraging truth, that " the Lord can make a way, where there feems to be no way:" O that He may graciously continue thus to favour us! After this opportunity, we went to the aforementioned merchant's, and were treated with genuine hospitality. After supper, there came in eight or ten persons with the expectation of a meeting, in which they were not disappointed; and I hope it was edifying to them, George Dillwyn having fuitable and lively matter to communicate. We had also a religious sitting with a family from Elberfelt, a lively spirited couple, and another person with them. After spending five days here, and bearing the cross as faithfully, perhaps, as in some places where a more open door was ministered, we departed in much peace, and under the belief, that the power of truth is making its own way in that neighbourhood. In our way from Bilefeld, we stopped at a large village called Guterflots, where there are many well disposed people. We staid one day there, and fat with a few people who met us at one of their houses; after which, and distributing a few books to others in the town, we went forward to Munster. We are often very weary, and the accommodations we meet with but indifferent, compared with those of England: the roads are also bad where we have already been, which, with the construction of the carriages, occasion us sometimes to be grievously jolted; and yet we have no cause to complain, having our confolations as well as toils; as it seldom happens that Zion's travellers are qualified to falute each other, even in a thorny difficult way, but the immortal birth, in some degree, leaps for joy. This experience, with the belief that the Lord is at work in the kingdoms of men, and even graciously rewarding such feeble endeayours as ours, with a morfel of the bread that the world knows not of, render any little fervices of ours as objects unworthy the notice of ourselves, or our friends. From Munster we went to Crevelt. We found our discouragements on entering it, being refused admission at one inn we went to, and at the next, we had fuch a crowd gathered about us, with fuch shoutings and rudeness, as greatly frighted our horses, after we were out of the carriage, and our driver had alighted, fo that they ran away, and he following, and taking hold of a chain behind, was thrown down, and his head, to appearance, much hurt against the wheel. Some of our feelings were low enough on this occasion. But through the continued kindness of providence, our man foon recovered, being able to move about next day; and the people of the house conceived fuch an affectionate respect for us, and treated us with fuch true civility, as made our fituation fo far comfortable. We also gradually made so much acquaintance, as afforded a degree of hope that our going to Crevelt was right, and that our fecret and known exercifes there, will not be in vain. About the time of our concluding to come away, our company began to be more fought; which opened the way for the disposal of some of our books, and I feel a fecret hope that they will be bleffed to some there. We came to Duffeldorf where we staid one day, and had the enjoyment of M. Wetterboar's company. He feems aged, but is

^{*} These were books containing a summary account of our principles.

is alive in the truth. We proceeded to Mulheim, where we arrived the 23d of the 9th month. It is a town about two miles from Cologne, like a Goshen on the confines of Egypt, where many awakened, and fome truly religious people refide. We commenced an acquaintance with a few, who have got a clear infight, from the work of truth in themselves, into the gospel dispensation, and the spirituality of the christian religion; concerning these we have encouraging prospects; yet not without a mixture, knowing fomething of Satan's devices. They received us in the name of difciples. We had divers religious opportunities with them, and parted under the precious fense of divine love and life. We paid a visit to a merchant's wife, a woman of amiable character, who through religious concern, has got into a despairing condition. It was attended with great fatisfaction to ourselves, from the sweetness which attended our own minds in her company, and in that of her husband's, who seems bending under the affliction, and likely to profit by it. She often expressed an earnest wish, that she had seen us at a time when fuch a visit might have been bleffed to her; but faid, that now it was too late for any thing that was good to be offered to her. This was, however, very far from our fense. Now, through the renewal of unutterable mercy, and never failing help, my foul acknowledges a relief and answer of peace (as far as relates to this fervice) which I am fure my little endeavours, and compelled dedication are unworthy of. We have had many discouragements fince we came to the continent, and many baptifms into death: we have also partaken largely of providential care, and been favoured, from time to time, when refignation was attained to, with that direction whose effects have often proved its rectitude, and strengthened our faith; and my foul, at times, has been put into the capacity of lying down as befide the still waters. Some of the last openings, or sense of duty, have been the most trying and in the cross; but being yielded to, and the work performed, a comfortable retreat hath been clearly and fweetly founded from this large field of arduous labour; and at a time, when an openness among the people was manifestly increasing. This I esteem an inexpressible favour, and fuch a one as they only can be fenfible of, who have gone under the weight of fimilar mountains, and been involved in the fear of being misled.

At Mulheim, she drew up and signed a letter to Leopold the Second, King of Hungary, &c. since Emperor of Germany, in which her companions united. For some time before her arrival at this place, her mind had been very weightily exercised with the important subjects expressed in this letter; insomuch that, at one period, she was under an apprehension that it would be required of her to go in person, and relieve her mind to the king. But from this very trying service, she felt herself comfortably released, and the mode of addressing him by letter, was satisfactorily substituted. The address was intrusted to the care of a reputable merchant of Cologne, who engaged to forward it without delay. The following is a copy of it.

To LEOPOLD the Second, King of Hungary, Bohemia, &c. &c.

Among the numerous congratulations awaiting, thy accession to the imperial crown, accept, O King! our christian good wishes and solicitude for thy prefent and eternal well-being. We are conscious that we have no claim to the liberty of addreffing thee, but from a belief that the Lord Almighty, who ruleth in the kingdoms of men, and giveth them to whomfoever he will, hath inclined us to leave our habitations to visit some parts of this country, and now engages us, in gofpel love, to express our secret and united prayer, that thou mayst be an instrument in his holy hand, for the advancement of that glorious day, spoken of by the prophet, "when fwords shall be beaten. into ploughshares, and spears into pruning hooks, when nation shall not lift up sword against nation; neither shall they learn war any more." The great design of our universal Parent, in sending his beloved Son a light into the world, is for his own glory in the falvation of mankind; and for this gracious end, he hath given to all men a measure of his own eternal spirit. To co-operate with Him herein, dignifies human nature, and is particularly deferving the most scrupulous attention of princes. The fmallest revelation of this heavenly gift in the believing foul, having a degree of omnipotence in it, brings into subjection the natural will and wifdom of man, and discovers to us the noble purposes of our creation; it diffuses that true benevolence which characterizes genuine christianity, and renders dear to a prince, the happiness of all, even the meanest of his subjects; imprinting upon his mind the fuperior value of an immortal foul, to all worldly acquisitions. Through the neglect of a principle fo pure and important, how hath the rational part of God's creation been facrificed to the irregular passions of sovereigns; and many unprepared fouls precipitated into an awful futurity! That the gospel dispensation is intended to remedy these evils, and promote the government of the Prince of Peace; that the Gentiles are to come to its light, and kings to the brightness of its arising, are truths to which the facred records abundantly testify. May this be thy happy experience, O king! that fo the power thou art providentially intrusted with, being fubfervient to divine wifdom, thy example may influence the minds of other princes, who also beholding its excellency, may unite in encouraging their fubjects to decline, in mutual charity and forbearance, whatever is contrary to the purity and fimplicity of the religion of Jesus. And may'ft thou be enriched with all fpiritual bleffings; that these added to thy temporal ones, may not only perfect thy happiness, but perpetuate it beyond the narrow limits of time, and qualify thee, acceptably, to cast down thy crown at the feet of Him who is King of kings, and Lord of lords, who lives and reigns for ever and ever.

George and Sarah Dillwyn, of Burlington, New Jersey, North America.

Sarah Grubb, Clonmel, Jofhua Beale, Cork, Ireland.

Members of the religious fociety of friends in those countries and Great Britain, commonly called Quakers. A fhort time before her return home, on a review of some parts of this journey, she wrote as follows.

In many places, we found a people who were discontented and weary with the mere profession of christianity, and the deadness of those forms and ceremonies with which it is incumbered; and who were convinced of the fufficiency of the heavenly principle. These, having been mercifully visited with a lively fense of the spirituality of true religion, received us in the name of disciples, and rejoiced in being directed to the christian's rest. This true fabbath, was, however, imperfectly understoodby many of them, for want of ceasing, when they met together in little companies, from all activity of their own, and depending fingly on the quickening. virtue of truth, to qualify them for, and lead theminto, fuch fervices as are most acceptable, and most consistent with the duty of true, spiritual believers. Some of this people appeared to be for near this great point, as foon to discover and acknowledge it; but their increasing testimony thereto, will, if rightly borne, prove the closest trial which they have yet met with. We are indeed convinced, beyond all shadow of doubt, that there is a choice heritage in Germany, and in other parts of the Continent, who are gradually retiring to the true sheepfold; but, at present, they are, like the disciples, secreted in an inner chamber for fear of the Jews. Our visit to this people, though attended with a degree of fuffering, hath been productive of folid peace.

Her mind being thus comfortably released from this field of labour, she proceeded from Mulheim to Cleves, and from thence, through Flanders, to Dunkirk, and arrived at London the 27th of 10th month 1790; and feeling a defire to visit her relations at York, &c. before her return home, she went pretty directly for that city; where she staid a few days, very much to the comfort and fatisfaction of her relatives and friends there. At this time she laboured under evident indisposition of body; but the fweetness of her spirit, and the cheering effects of meeting again her beloved connections, with the profpect of foon returning to those at Clonmel, supported her in a great measure above it, and encouraged her to fet forward and proceed towards home; which she did by way of Ackworth, Sheffield, Manchester, &c. At these places, she was again refreshed by the company of divers near and dear friends: it appeared, indeed, by thus encompassing, in this short visit, so many of her beloved connections, that, as the time of her fojourning here was foon to close, she was enabled and permitted to wind up the labours of her day, with the mutual confolation of feeing again many of those with whom she was closely united, and bidding them a final farewell in mutability. At Ackworth, the spent the night with a near and beloved relative, to whom, in much brokenness of spirit, she thus expressed herself: Oh! my dear, I think fometimes that I shall soon be gone; it feems, as if my day's work was nearly done, and on looking towards home, as if I might not be long there."

She reached Dublin in time for the half year's meeting, and in the select meeting there, gave an account of her late journey, with great meekness and humility of spirit; ascribing nothing to the creature, but rendering to the Lord the praise of His own works. From hence, she proceeded directly for Clonmel, (having account of the small-pox being in the samily) where she was savoured to arrive the 12th of the 11th month, much relieved from a severe cough which had lately attended her, though greatly exhausted in her strength and spirits. On her way from Dublin, she writes thus to a friend:

To be firengthened rightly to fill up our appointed measure of sufferings for the body's sake, whether at home or abroad, is a mark of divine savour, and will be succeeded by undefiled rest.—I am now returning home, under a grateful sense of Providential care, and in peaceful poverty of spirit.

The following is extracted from a letter which the wrote at Clonmel, a few days after her return.

I can now once more falute you from home, in renewed and endeared affection, and gratefully acknowledge the multiplied prefervations of our never-failing Helper, in thus far bringing through a variety of exercifes, from which the natural mind cannot relieve itself. I reflect with solid satisfaction upon my visit at York, &c. and am glad I paid it, though I feel myself a poor worn-out creature. The 24th of the 11th month she set off from Clonmel to attend their quarterly meeting at Cork; previous previous to which the wrote the following letter to a friend:

My prefent affliction hath gained great afcendency over my mind, fo that I feem fast losing my hold, and fense of Him that is invisible; and remembering fome past exercise, when I was in danger of losing the best life, I am ready to say, with mournful Jeremiah, " cause me not to return to Jonathan's house, lest I die there." I know that nothing hath yet occurred, which needs to fcatter a well regulated mind from the fource of good; but I am left to fuch a fense of my own wretchedness, that even the grasshopper or things comparable to it, are become a burden. To attend a quarterly meeting under fuch impressions, is a prospect which I need not describe; but I fear to make a prey of thy fympathetic mind. May I be preferved from a murmuring disposition, by which the holy Spirit is grieved!

At the quarterly meeting, she delivered in, an humble account of her late mission, appeared in divers acceptable testimonies, and at the close of the meeting was taken ill. This last conflict of nature, which was at times very severe, continued about ten days, when it pleased infinite wissom to remove her from the toils and troubles of mortality, to a mansion of everlasting rest, on the 8th of the 12th month 1790, and on the 12th her remains were attended to the burying-ground by many friends. It was a solemn, memorable time; and living testimonies were there borne to the sufficiency of that power, (which had so eminently qualified her for his fervice,) to raise up and abilitate others to follow her footsteps. During her illness, which was at the house of her beloved friends Samuel and Sarah Neale, she dropped a few expressions, worthy of prefervation, which have been collected and are as follow: In a message to a young woman who prefided in the school at Clonmel, she faid; Salute her very affectionately. I desire the sympathy of her spirit, and that she may be endued with additional qualifications to bear her own, and our joint trials, under these complicated circumstances. Tell her, I have been much favoured with quietness of mind from the first, though a stranger to how the present afflictions or trials may terminate; but the grain of faith and hope which is mercifully vouchsafed, I esteem preferable to all knowledge. She further faid; give my dear love to all our young women; I hope that each will be preserved in their respective lines of duty. I know their tenderness for me, but would be forry they should let down their spirits too low; for I believe that truth would rather increase, than lessen our strength, at fuch times as these. The children are all affectionately remembered by me: I hope they will each endeavour to lighten the general burden, by their fobriety, and doing that which they know to be right. I am trying to get my mind to a fettlement, that all things work together for good; but it is hard to get at it. She feveral times faid: " I must go. You must let me go." And nearly the last words she spoke were repeating that passage of fcripture, "my peace I give unto you."

Four days before her decease, she dictated the following weighty, instructive letter, to a particular friend. Thy falutation met me, though apparently out of course, in the right time; being under impressions, which make time and circumstances of little account, compared with the unlimited confolations of the Spirit, or a preparation to receive them at the Divine Hand. My foul, though encompassed with the manifold infirmities of a very afflicted tabernacle, can feelingly worship and rejoice in nothing more than this, that the Lamb immaculate is still redeeming, by his precious blood, out of every nation, kindred, tongue, and people; and making a glorious addition to the church triumphant, whose names will stand eternally recorded in the book of life. I express not these things from a redundancy of heavenly virtue, but from the foul-fustaining evidence, that, amidst all our weakness and conflicts of flesh or spirit, an interest is mercifully granted in Him, who giveth victory over death, hell, and the grave.

Thus hath the fetting fun of this humble follower of the Lamb, gone down in brightness; and though she hath been called away as in younger life, (being only in the 35th year of her age) yet her day's work appears to have been compleat, and, with respect to herself, every measure worth living for, filled up. Honourable age is not that which standeth in length of time, or that which is measured by number of years; but wisdom is the gray hair to man, and an unspotted life is old age. May we who remain behind, whilst we deplore the church's loss in the removal of so useful and dignified a fervant, be encouraged to imitate her example, and to furrender ourselves in faithfulness and dedication to all the Lord's requirings: that so, when the residue of our days is accomplished, we also may be favoured to receive that blessed declaration; "well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord, and into thy master's rest."

A Testimony

A Testimony from our monthly Meeting for the County of Tipperary, concerning Sarah Grubb, deceased.

Our minds being deeply affected by the recent great loss which the church hath sustained, in the removal of our beloved friend, Sarah Grubb, daughter of our friends William Tuke and his late wife Elizabeth of York, we feel it incumbent on us to give forth a testimony concerning her; for as the memory of the just is bleffed, so the remembrance of this dignified and eminently useful member in the church militant, is precious to many; to whom she was a nursing mother, raised up, by a thorough submission to the operation of the divine hand, to the stature of an elder in the truth, though, as to years, fhe had scarcely attained the meridian of life. She was a woman of extraordinary natural abilities, strength of judgment, and clearness of discernment; and being favoured with the visitation of heavenly love in the morning of her day, and fubmitting to be brought into that passive nothingness, wherein the vessels in the Lord's house are formed and fitted for usefulness, she witnessed an early preparation for service, coming forth in publick ministry about the 23d year of her age. After exercifing some years the precious gift committed to her, to the confolation of many, she joined in marriage with our friend Robert Grubb, and very foon after manifested the fruit of entire dedication, by visiting the meetings of friends in Scotland, where her fervice was truly acceptable, and continued in fuch a line of devotedness, that in the course of about five years she visited most, or all the meetings in Great Britain and Ireland. About three years fince, she removed with her husband to reside within the compass of this monthly meeting; wherein she was deeply exercifed in spirit, for the arising and fpreading of life, and frequently and earneftly engaged in exciting her brethren and fifters to diligent labour after it. In ministry, she was found and edifying, not only like the scribe instructed to the kingdom, bringing forth out of her treasure things new and old, but qualified by pure wisdom, to bring them forth in the demonstration of the spirit and with power, in the authority and becoming gravity of the gospel, being in her delivery an example to all concerned in bearing a publick testimony for the Lord's cause. The view of coming to fettle in this nation, was accompanied with a fense of divine requiring, to establish a school, for the education of the daughters of friends in useful learning, simplicity, and that unaffected piety into which truth leads its followers; which she was enabled to accomplish, we trust, to the lasting advantage of some of the rifing generation. Soon after her coming to refide among us, she, in consequence of a concern which had for a confiderable time refted on her mind, engaged in a religious vifit to Holland, fome parts of Germany and the fouth of France; in which she was joined by several friends, and wherein she was eminently gifted for the service to which she was called; her ministry, private admonitions, and exemplary deportment, reaching the witness in many minds; so that her fervent labour, and the fweet favour of her exercised spirit, we believe is still felt, and will be long profitably fitably remembered in those parts. After her return, she paid an acceptable visit to several parts of this province, and had meetings where none of our fociety dwelt, much tending to spread the knowledge of the truth. And lastly, under the prevalence of gospel love, and earnest solicitude that the sheep not yet of this fold might be gathered to the teachings of the great Shepherd, fhe again left her own habitation, and engaged, with fome of her former companions, in a very arduous and exercifing vifit to Dunkirk, Holland, and fome of the northern parts of Germany; wherein, we have reason to believe, she had eminent fervice, to the confirming of many visited minds in the faith, and promoting the bleffed cause of truth and righteousness; in which glorious work, her intrepid spirit shrunk not from fuffering: the extending of the government of her dear Lord and Master in the hearts of the children of men, and the promotion and increase of His spiritual kingdom over sea and land, being nearer to her than her natural life, or any other confideration, she was brought to a willingness to be spent therein. In her return, she attended our national meeting, and in the meeting of ministers and elders, giving an account of her late journey, under the influence of that humility which was fo conspicuously the covering of her fpirit, she ascribed all to Him, whom she knew to be the Author of every good work, in these expresfions: "we have done but little, but the Lord is doing much;" concluding with, "return unto thy rest, O my foul! for the Lord hath dealt bountifully with thee?" as though prophetick of that everlasting everlafting rest, into which she was so near being gathered: for her bodily strength being considerably impaired, by almost constant exercise and fatigue, it proved unequal to the force of a distemper, which soon after seized her frame, and, by a rapid progress, terminated those afflictions of which she had so largely filled up her measure, for the body's sake, which is the church.

tain

She attended our quarterly meeting at Cork, returned a lively account of her journey, and was acceptably exercifed in the meetings there; after which, she was confined by fickness at the house of our dear friend Samuel Neale, near that city, where, among other weighty expressions, she uttered the following, "I have been much favoured with quietness of mind from the first, though a stranger to how the present afflictions or trials may terminate; but the grain of faith and hope which is mercifully vouchfafed, I esteem preferable to all knowledge." In a letter which she dictated to a near friend four days before her decease, she faid, " My foul, though encompassed with the manifold infirmities of a very afflicted tabernacle, can feelingly worship and rejoice in nothing more than this, that the Lamb immaculate is still redeeming, by his precious blood, out of every nation, kindred, tongue and people, and making a glorious addition to the church triumphant, whose names will stand eternally recorded in the book of life. I express not these things from a redundancy of heavenly virtue, but from the foul-fustaining evidence, that, amidst all our weakness and conflicts of flesh and spirit, an interest is mercifully granted in Him, who giveth victory over death, hell and the grave." Which, with other corroborating circumstances, clearly evinced, where her hope and dependance were, and that her refined spirit was prepared for its glorious mansion, into which we have no doubt it was admitted. She departed this life the 8th of the 12th month 1790; and after a solemn meeting being previously held at the meeting house, wherein, and at the grave-yard, several living testimonies were borne, her body was interred in friends burying ground, in Cork, the 12th of the same; aged about 34 years.

Her conversation was innocently cheerful, which endeared her to the youth of both fexes, and gave her much place and influence with them. To her beloved husband, she was a truly affectionate wife; to her friends a near fympathizer in affliction; and being clothed with that charity which feeketh not her own, and breatheth peace and good will to all, was ready to reach forth the hand of help, fo that the whole of her conduct was an uniform confistency with her holy profession, and the purity of those doctrines which she surely believed and was engaged fo extensively to publish. May she, being dead, yet speak with a prevailing language to us all who are left behind; "follow me as I followed Christ;" that so we may die the death of the righteous, and our latter end be like theirs.

Given forth at a monthly meeting for the county of Tipperary, held at Clonmel by adjournment, the 13th day of the 2d month 1791.

Signed in and on behalf thereof, by many friends.

The annexed testimony concerning our beloved friend, Sarah Grubb, has been read in our quarterly men's and women's meeting for Munster Province, held in Cork the 21st of the 2d month 1791, with which we have near unity.

Signed on behalf of our men's meeting by RICHARD ABELL, Clerk.

And on behalf of our women's meeting by MARGARET GRUBB, Clerk.

Read, and approved, in our half year's meeting for Ireland, held in Dublin, from the 1st of the 5th month 1791, to the 5th of the same inclusive, and on behalf thereof figned by JOHN DAVIS, Clerk to the meeting this time.

and the second

A Testimony of York quarterly Meeting concerning Sarah Grubb, late Wife of our Friend Robert Grubb of Clonmel, in Ireland.

This our valuable friend, having been a member of this meeting until within the four last years of her life, and the remembrance of her being precious to many of us, we feel our minds engaged to unite in a short testimony concerning her, with defires that many, from her pious and excellent example, ample, may be ftirred up, according to their different measures, to follow her as she followed Christ.

She was born in the city of York, in the year 1756, and was favoured with a guarded and religious education, which, with the divine bleffing upon it, preserved her from many dangers and follies to which youth are often exposed, and prepared her heart for that open reception of the truth, and entire furrender to its dictates, which remarkably diftinguished her through the more advanced periods of life. But though she was early under the vifitations of divine love, yet being of a quick and lively disposition, joined to great natural abilities, she found it hard work to fubmit to the lowliness and simplicity of the cross of Christ; and endured many fore conflicts before fhe furrendered her will to the government of the Prince of Peace. Whilst under the Lord's preparing hand for the work of the ministry, she experienced many deep baptisms of spirit; but He who knew her fincerity, and earnest defires for His holy help and direction, graciously fustained her in this proving feafon, and in due time brought forth living offerings, to His own praise, and the comfort of many minds. In the exercise of her ministry, she was careful not to move in her own time and will, nor to exceed her gift; but to be attentive to the arifings and continuance of life, with patient refignation and dedication of heart.

Her love and gratitude to the Father of mercies, and her fervent concern for the prosperity of his cause on earth, made her unwearied in her labours to promote it, and to be willing to fpend and be fpent for his great Name's fake. She was an example of true humility and abasedness of self, feeling that all her fprings were in the Lord, and that though the creature may at feafons be honoured, yet every good and perfect gift came from above, and called for unfeigned acknowledgment. To the necessity and powerful efficacy of the pure principle of light and grace in the foul, she bore many living testimonies, and recommended, above all things, the closest attention and obedience to its holy manifestations, as that alone which can preserve from the spots of the world, redeem the mind from its spirit and enjoyments, and confer that peace which the world can neither give nor take away. She beheld and mourned over the breaches and wafte places of Zion, and we believe laboured honeftly, according to the strength received, for the repairing thereof, and the restoration of ancient beauty and fimplicity. Her fuperior abilities, fanctified by the humbling operations of the holy spirit, qualified her for extensive service in the administration of the discipline of the church; wherein she was concerned to act, under a degree of that covering, which ought to influence every religious movement. Of a folid and weighty spirit, she was engaged to dig deeply for the hidden treasure, and laboured to dwell near the spring of divine life: yet infinite wifdom faw meet to fuffer her at feafons to experience great inward poverty: but under thefe proving difpensations, she murmured not, being refigned to the will of her Lord and Master, and made willing " to fuffer with him, that fhe might alfo reign with him." And having partaken of T.

the fufferings and confolations of the gospel, she knew how to fympathize with the exercised and mourning spirit, dealing her bread, when qualified, to the hungry foul, and pouring in the wine and oil to the help and refreshment of many. And as this devoted faithful fervant of the Lord was thus instrumental in glorifying His name among mankind, and promoting the divine government in their hearts, fo she became more and more refined, and redeemed from all visible enjoyments; until, in unfearchable wifdom, He who put her forth and went before her, was pleafed to "cut short the work in righteoufness," and to remove her, we doubt not, from His church militant on earth, to his church triumphant in heaven.

Read, approved, and figned, in, by order, and on behalf of our quarterly meeting held in York, by adjournments, on the 30th and 31st of the 3d month 1791 by

MORDECAI CASSON, Clerk to the meeting this time.

ELIZABETH TUKE, Clerk this time.

APPENDIX:

APPENDIX:

CONTAINING

AN

ACCOUNT

OF

ACKWORTH SCHOOL,

OBSERVATIONS

NC

CHRISTIAN DISCIPLINE,

AND VALUABLE

EXTRACTS

FROM MANY OF HER

LETTERS.

SOME

ACCOUNT

0 7

ACKWORTH SCHOOL,

ADDRESSED TO A

FRIEND IN AMERICA.

Dear Friend,

THE following imperfect account of Ackworther fectors is presented to thee, in confidence that thou wilt not expose it, and yet with a hope that it may privately aid thy endeavours to establish a school, for the religious education of youth, in another part of the world; an engagement worthy of thyself, but requiring something better to render it truly successful.

As religious concerns cannot, any more than those of a civil nature, be rightly carried forward without order and method, it becomes a very important inquiry, what rules and adjustments of things pertaining thereto, are consistent with the L 3 spirituality fpirituality of their origin, and when these are found, they call for great care in officers and their superintendents, to keep them in their proper places, lest that which is begun in the spirit, should be sought to be made perfect in the flesh.

There is a moral rectitude, fabricated in human wisdom, which is beautiful to the natural eye, seizes on the passions, and draws from a superficial judgment, an inconsiderate approbation of what, perhaps, when it is scrutinized into, has sprung from a love of popular applause, and tends to settle those who are active in it, in a rest and enjoyment of the work of their own hands.

To know the first spring of action, is a noble attainment; and if it prove pure, then carefully to keep it so, is a work (thou well knowest) of far greater magnitude; and which will tend more to the regulation of a school, than a fine-spun system of positive rules, untinctured with faith in the sufficiency of divine aid, immediately communicated.

To obtain a right form is furely of absolute necessity, because regularity is one of the wheels whereby the intended work is to be effected; and perhaps some useful order may be gathered from the following pages, which I hope will not be implicitly adopted. Indeed, I have been thoughtful, in the course of my penning them, whether such as are rightly influenced to promote an education consistent with our holy profession, would not be better furnished with qualifications to settle even civil concerns, without a model of the experience of others; feeing that the fountain of divine wifdom is inexhaustible; that for the conducting of temporal things, there can be no order like that which immediately flows from it; and that a very small digression of our attention from this source, is often succeeded by many erroneous steps.

ACKWORTH SCHOOL.

To thy prudence, therefore, I commit this little work, believing thou wilt not use it improperly. If it afford thee any useful reflections, in times of relaxation from the weight of gospel fervice, be the means of opening for me a door of access into thy closet, make me a partaker of thy treafure, and fometimes revive me in thy remembrance for good, I shall be fully satisfied. One observation further occurs to my mind, for which, as this is all a piece of freedom, I shall not apologize. As nothing can be faid to be truly religious, (whatever the first design may be) but what is religiously conducted, a very special care ought to be maintained to the pointings of truth, in choosing instructors and servants for a school: who should be more directed to the school of Christ themselves, than loaded with injunctions about trivial matters, and their conformity to themconfidered as their qualifications. No law or rule ought to be fo framed, as to interfere with their religious duties; and when any make a wrong use of the liberty truth allows, great care should be exercifed, left alterations take place, which have a tendency to circumfcribe the righteous with the transgressor; for where this is the case, people of an outward, steady conduct, a cringing temper, and who:

L 4

who know but little about revealed religion, feem to be most adapted to such an institution. These may, to the utmost of their natural abilities, preferve order, and prefer the works which most recommend them to those in superior power, being as earnest in their endeavours, as any, to promote the establishment of civil authority, and of a great many specious forms: but the vitals of the institution being oppressed, and the spirit and life of every act of duty to the children, and of christian discipline among them, disregarded, the whole body must gradually grow diseased and corrupted.

Education is a fubject fo copious, when unfolded to the inward attention of those to whom the care of children is rightly committed, as to require a better affisted pen than mine, to do it justice; but this I believe, that simplicity, godly sincerity, and a righteous zeal and tenderness, with an improving and imparting knowledge of useful things, can hardly fail of rendering a perfon who is under a secret sense of duty, qualified to undertake it.

To be fensible of the divine influence, to propagate the knowledge of it, and so to prefer it to all other considerations, as to walk worthy of its bleffing being shed upon our endeavours, is the Alpha, and the Omega, of our profession. That "the bleffing of heaven above, and of the deep that lieth under," may rest upon thee, dear friend! crown all thy labours, sweeten all thy bitter cups, and render invincible the habitation of thy spirit, when storms may assail it, and discouragements wait wait at the threshold of its door, is the present fervent breathing of thy truly affectionate friend, SARAH GRUBB.

Foston, 1st month 5th 1786.

S E C T. I.

Ackworth school is an institution intended for the religious education of children, members of our fociety, between the age of nine * and fourteen, and particularly of those whose parents are not in affluent circumstances. It admits of three hundred, viz. one hundred and eighty boys, and one hundred and twenty girls. They are paid for, at their entrance, by a bill of admittance of eight guineas value; for which they are provided with board, learning, clothing, and other necessaries, for one year; four shillings and four-pence are also then deposited, as an allowance of one penny perweek for pocket money. This school is under the immediate care of two committees, in each of which there are twenty-eight members; one is constituted of friends of London, and held there; the other of friends in the neighbourhood of Ackworth; divers of whom are twenty, thirty, and fome forty miles distant from the place.

Each committee meets once a month; when the general state of the institution is considered, particular regulations proposed, complaints received, the intended resignation of services reported, and friends appointed to inquire for a supply of asfistants, &c. &c.

L 5 friends

^{*} The prefent limitation of age is between eight and fourteen.

As it often happens that divers friends are at Ackworth the night before the fitting of the committee, or early in the morning, three of them inspect all bills of parcels, and the treasurer's accounts; and report to the committee the state thereof, the number of the children admitted and returned fince last month, and those that are upon the lift for admittance: others examine the improvement of fuch as are likely to depart the enfuing month; and, generally, religious opportunities are taken with them, and an account given thereof to the committee. Copies of the minutes of each committee are transmitted to one another, and neither of them conclude upon any thing new, of importance, without mutual approbation. Several friends, once a year, give up to an appointment to spend some time in the house, in order to value the stock, to fettle all accounts, and to take a more general and minute furvey of the state of the family, than could be done at any other time with fo much propriety: and generally, on vifits to the family, at other times, the company of women friends has been defired, a number having their names down on the committee's books for fuch fervices. Agents are appointed in each county, who undertake to negociate the business between those who send the children, and the inftitution, by providing bills of admittance and certificates, and giving notice of their readiness, &c.

A general meeting is held at Ackworth once a year, constituted of friends appointed to attend it from the feveral quarterly meetings. Here the state of the institution is intended to be laid. open; all subjects of doubt, and especially such asthe two committees could not agree upon, to be referred for candid discussion and determination. and new regulations or rules established.

A large number of friends from diftant parts, is appointed to inspect the children's advances in learning, &c. and to obtain a knowledge of their teachers abilities, a free and honest representation whereof is thought absolutely necessary. This general meeting adjourns to a fuitable time in the vearly meeting week, when their minutes are read, and a report made from thence to the yearly meeting at large.

N. B. The inspection of the female side of the: house is committed to the women friends, assem-bled at the general meeting at Ackworth; who: appoint different committees to examine the different departments, have free conferences with the officers, inspect the girls improvements, take religious opportunities with them, and report the fubstance of their observations, and the propriety of fuch amendments as occur to them thereupon; after which, minutes are formed, and a copy of them fent into the mens meeting...

There are flationed in the family, a treasurer and his wife, to whom is committed the superintendence of the whole.*

The boys have generally four or five mafters, whose salaries are from 25 to 1001. ‡ per annum, intended as proportionate to their services, and abilities; and there are also some apprentices. The number of the schools is sour, and the masters keep much to the distinct branches of learning for which they are best qualified; as one, reading, another writing, a third arithmetick, &c. and the children pass in classes from school to school, except the little ones, who are principally kept under the care of one master.

The apartments for teaching are so commodious as to render all crowding unnecessary, especially at writing; the desks, though in one continued length, have nevertheless such divisions, by openings for each boy's books, &c. that there need not be any interference, if they keep their places.

Ten or twelve of the eldest and most folid boys, are chosen monitors, who lend some affistance in the schools, particularly in settling the children to their places, and taking care that each has his own.

About

* These ferve the institution without a salary, which greatly adds to their authority.

‡ 1001. was the falary of the principal master; but this office being discontinued, no salary is now so high.

About ten minutes before every meal, a bell is rung, at which the children are quickly collected in ranks, either on the open ground, or under a colonade which shelters from wet and heat. The masters stand in the front in their own divisions, whilst the monitors survey them behind and before, taking care that their buckles are in order, their hair combed, and if any be dirty, to send them to wash.

Here the masters have a frequent opportunity of making useful observations, giving general directions, administering counsel, and selecting out offenders for the table of disgrace; which is no otherwise distinguished, than by being detached from the rest, and having no cloth upon it.

When the fecond bell rings for meals, they advance in couples with great regularity to the dining-room, (the leaft going first) and divide at the foot of the table, one going up on one side, and the other on the other; by which means they are seated with dexterity and expedition.

A general filence immediately enfues, which, by an intimation from one of the masters, is soon broke, and all begin their meal; but no conversation louder than a whisper is allowed, during the time of eating, and no more in that manner than is necessary for transferring their victuals from one to another, when some have too much, and others too little, the latter of which are freely supplied by the masters, if they ask.

When all appetites appear fatisfied, and a meal is ended, filence again takes place, after which, with an intimation of quietude, and fedateness, they are beckened to depart. They unite again in couples at the foot of the table where they parted, and walk steadily out of the room into the places appointed for play, where they disperse. It is thought necessary, that one of the masters should bestow a general oversight on them in these times of relaxation, with no more interference than is absolutely necessary.

S E C T. III.

The same order is observed among the girls, as with the boys, at school and meals; they have seldom less than four mistresses whose salaries are from 12 to 25l. per annum; these teach sewing, knitting, spinning slax, reading, and the English grammar. Writing and arithmetick are also taught by one of the masters, who is particularly set at liberty, part of every day, for that purpose, and has a certain division of girls each time; but the committees are desirous, that some of the semale teachers should be qualified to instruct in these branches of learning.*

A wife attention is paid in the girls fchools to quietude and regularity; each is to know her own business, and the time for applying for instruction about her work, &c. There are two or three apprentices for whom there is a considerable sphere of action, in affifting the miftreffes, as there are many more articles of care among the girls than the boys; fuch as large stocks of goods to be made up into wearing apparel, cutting up work, teaching various branches of the executive part, and dealing out haberdasheries to the children. A discreet allotment of care and employ to these, preserves the mistresses from too oppressive a load of anxiety about fmaller matters, and gives them an opportunity, in their respective schools, to cherish a necesfary recollection of mind, enabling them more fenfibly to partake of a measure of divine strength, by which alone they can govern with right authority and tenderness. They have also monitors, who have fimilar offices to the boys. The reading miftress has feldom more than one class in her school at a time, which confists of fix or eight, and they read paragraph by paragraph, all standing fo remote from her, as to render a proper exertion of their voices necessary, by which they are inured to read audibly. The miftress or affiftant teacher, to whom is committed the care of spinning, attends to that employ only a few hours each day; the rest of her time being taken up with mending the children's linen, especially that of the little ones, and instructing five or fix girls at a time in that art, having them, and that kind of work, in a room wholly fet at liberty for the purpose. The eldest girls take it in turns, one or two at a time, to affift the mantua-maker, who is supplied with plenty of work. They also take it in turns to work with the laundress every week, in washing, and getting up fmall linen, and in waiting at mealtimes at the house-keepers table; and one in turn is under the peculiar direction of the treasurer's wife, who keeps her pretty much to her own parlour, and employed in her work. Two of the girls are weekly appointed to sweep the lodging rooms every day, and all the girls make their own beds, (as they sleep in couples,) which are curled hair mattresses laid upon rails; they have a bosser, an under blanket, a pair of sheets, two upper blankets, and a counterpane of single furniture check, but no curtains. A chest with partitions stands at the head of every bed, and furnishes two girls with conveniencies for the keeping of their clothes, having two drawers at the bottom for their small linen.

of

^{*} These branches are now taught by female instructors.

Their apparel in general, and especially such as passes through the washings, is marked with the initials of their names, and the number of their bill of admittance.

The girls are provided with work by the inftitution, and for their improvement, finer needlework is taken in for hire than the family can furnish them with; and when that falls short, child-bed linen is sometimes made to sell, in which superfluous work is guarded against.

The girls and boys go to bed in the same order; and all their clothing is so folded up, and laid upon their chests, that though there are twenty or thirty beds in a room, yet after they are settled in bed, there is scarcely one article of clothing out of its proper place, and consequently no interference in putting them on. The lodging rooms have several ventilators in the ceiling. One or more of the mistresses, or steady apprentices, sleep in each, and a healthy cheerfulness and decorum are preserved through the whole.

ACKWORTH SCHOOL.

S E C T. IV.

At meeting the boys and girls enter in the same method, the boys first, a master leading the way; the least children immediately follow, and are seated on the uppermost cross forms, the rest regularly fucceeding according to their height; and coming in by couples, they fill two benches at a time, and very foon get all fettled. The monitors are placed on a fide bench, which gives them an opportunity of inspecting the behaviour of the other children, and of instructing them by their example, the masters and mistresses are placed at little distances, on a feat one step higher, by which they can overfee the whole. They depart with no less regularity than they come in, the children joining again in couples; and in fuitable weather, they take a circular walk round the area in the front of the house; after which, they are advised to retire to reading, a confiderable library of friends books being provided, part whereof is produced on a first day.—The children every evening fettle to read, the boys and girls feparate; and they all, with the family, are collected once a week for that purpose, previous to which, they quietly fettle down in filence for a little while, then one of the masters reads a chapter, and about fix boys, and as many girls, read fix or eight verses each; after which, they paufe again, until it is judged a fuitable time for the children to withdraw, which they do, not in couples as on other occasions, but fingly, going immediately to bed, and at fuch a distance from each other, as to admit of no conversation by the way, the teachers passing with them in certain divisions, preserves the quietude without interruption. They generally rife at fix in fummer, and feven in winter, and go to bed at nine in fummer, and eight in winter. It is a rule that every child, on admittance, shall have a certificate figned by a medical person, expressive of his or her being in health, and having no infectious diforders, or apparent fores; and if a child has not had the fmall-pox, the parent or guardian fignifies, whether, if the contagion should break out in the family, they choose inoculation. Whenever an illness of any kind appears, the fubject is configned to a fleady matron in the station of a nurse, who has convenient apartments for the reception of fuch; and an apothecary in the neighbourhood has a falary for attending at stated periods, whether he is wanted or not, and as much oftener as occasion requires; the drugs are kept in the house at the expense of the institution, and the nurse has the care of them.

N. B. The children's drefs, if not fo when they come, is modelled to a certain fimplicity, which meets with the general approbation of the most confistent part of the fociety; and such apparel as is provided by the institution, is of a substantial, and rather course texture, but neat in its colour and make, and a care is exercised over it, which preserves it so to the last. An exact uniform in colour, &c. has not been adopted.

S E C T. V.

The house-keeper has the general care and command of the kitchen, the keeping, giving out, and providing the house linen, she gives an account what victuals and stores are wanted, sees to the proper use of them, and delivers an account to the treasurer of her disbursements, once a month.

There are two chamber-maids, whose business it is to make the boys and family's beds, to sweep their lodging rooms and the stairs, every day except meeting days, to affist in getting up linen, mending sheets, the boys shirts and stockings, and also to help in washing and combing the boys. The nurse likewise affists in mending linen, but nothing is to interfere with her service to diseased children.

Two cooks are found sufficient; they contrive their business so as to have little hurry at meal times, and on the evening preceding meeting days, the victuals are so prepared for next day, that little more is necessary, having in summer, cold meat, or fruit-pies, and in winter, boiled plumb puddings, which only require one person to stay at home, to keep the coppers boiling.

They have one fervant whose business is principally washing dishes, &c. A steady, and rather elderly man, is generally kept for renewing the fires, and jobbing about. There is one dairy-maid, who has the care of the milk of upwards of twenty cows, assists in milking them, and makes the butter, &c. The laundress's work is only to inspect and affift in the washings. A mill, something like the bleachers, is used for large clothes; it is in a building detached from the house, and is wrought by a horse; the linen is washed in bags, being first forted and soaped; two washer-women are provided for one day, who, with a man that is kept in the capacity of a carpenter, can, with industry and the laundress's affistance, accomplish all that is fuitable for that engine. These washings come every week. One man has the care of baking and brewing, in which is included the children's dinners, when they have baked meat or pies, and making the bread, &c. There are 80 acres of land, and two men in the capacity of farmers, who, with a labourer occasionally, find sufficient employ in raifing a little grain, taking care of the cattle, affifting in milking, going no market about three miles distance, and fetching coals from the pits a few miles. The treasurer, his wife, the house-keeper, with all the masters, (except those who have families) mistresses, nurse, and mantuamaker, eat together at the house-keeper's table; and the other fervants fit down regularly together in the kitchen, where order and folidity are made incumbent for every fervant to observe. A taylor and shoe-maker, who have families, are stationed in cottages adjoining the house, and have falaries fufficient for their support. Single men lodge and board in the house, being found necessary to sleep in the boy's rooms. The family is supplied with vegetables from a large garden on the premifes, and the care of it committed to a man in the station of gardener, and his affiftants.

ACKWORTH SCHOOL. 255

N. B. Admitting into the family fuch as are not in profession with friends, is guarded against.

S E C T. VI.

Inconveniencies have been found by recommending persons with too partial an eye to their private interest, and obtaining for them a comfortable afylum; fo that fome who were not objectionable in their own spheres, and within the compass of their own abilities, have obstructed the right order of the institution, and have necessarily become objects of difapprobation; being defective in those faculties which were peculiarly requifite for the stations to which they were introduced: whereas fome others, from a secret apprehension of duty, and an upright defire for the good of the institution, have, under discouragements and much diffidence, before their qualifications were ripened to publick view, been put into offices; and yet these have in due time, been wonderfully opened in religious and civil usefulness, and have become as pillars in the support of right government in the family. It has been found expedient, from which great advantages have arisen to the family, that friends who travel in truth's fervice, and those that come disinterestedly on the business of the institution, should be freely accommodated in the house; any expense occafioned thereby, being more than compensated by their religious concern and endeavours for the prosperity of the whole houshold. Nevertheless, inconveniencies and unnecessary expense have evidently arisen by the children's connections, and those who only come from curiosity, having free access to the accommodations provided by the institution; and therefore an inn has been opened in the neighbourhood, * where people may be agreeably entertained, and enjoy, as if they were in the house, every privilege of seeing the children, observing the order of the family, and attending religious opportunities. As a library of fuitable books is provided by the inftitution for the children's use, and as others of a very different tendency have unwifely been fent by their connexions, it has been found expedient to forbid the introduction of any publications but what first undergo the teacher's inspection.

those

Divers advantages have arisen by the school's not being limited to the children of friends in straitened circumstances; as those who had their outward affairs in good order, might be expected fo to have extended their care to their offspring, as that their example among the more ignorant and less guarded youth, might promote folidity and good order in the family: and in cases where that care had not been fufficiently extended, the good of fuch children, not less than others, appears to be the object of the fociety's concern: and as their parents were not prevented from contributing to the support of the institution, so as amply to allow for the additional expense above the stated fum, and even to exceed it if they thought proper, no reasonable objection could arise on that account.

By

^{*} As the premifes belong to the inflitution, the committee has fome control on the tenant.

By this means the house was more easily supported, and that distinction in the spirit of the world, which is the bane of religious fociety, was in some degree removed. Thus children intended to fill different stations in life, being fet upon an equality, with which nothing interfered but their merit or demerit, has proved a great encouragement to friends in low circumstances to send their offspring, when they found there was no defign publickly to mark them as objects of charity; which, no doubt, from diffidence in some, and an unwillingness to be denominated poor in others, would have been generally fo difagreeable, as that the number of three hundred children could fcarcely have been found, whose parents would have fubmitted to receive a national benefit, if thereto the badge of poverty had been affixed. As the poor in civil, much more in religious fociety, are entitled to necessary and comfortable accommodations, and those who are in easy circumstances, upon the principle of loving our neighbours as ourselves, have not a right to more, fuch an education as is fuited to the one, may not be inconfistent with the other, if instead of training them for children of this world, the cultivation of their minds, as followers of Christ, be the principal object in view. A friend may, for procuring the necessaries of life, be in easy circumstances, support an honourable appearance among men, and a generous hospitality towards his friends, being of those who rather desire to give than receive; and yet, if out of a large family, he wishes to fend three or four to school, and thinks it his duty to provide the most guarded education, it may be quite inconfistent with his abilities, and the education he wishes them to have, to place them in a more expensive fituation than what, upon an average, they cost the institution at Ackworth: to prevent such a friend from the benefit of fo generous a defign, is incompatible with the avowed concern of the fociety for the welfare of its youth. Our judgment of one another's circumstances in life is often erroneous, and it hath forrowfully appeared, that many have been strangers to their own; and some who might be unkindly judged for fending their children to Ackworth school, because of the appearance of affluence, which they unwifely fupported for a time, have proved unable even to bear the expense of keeping them there without the affistance of their friends. There have been objections in the minds of some friends to an open door for all children whose parents approved the plan of education, from a supposition that the house would be crowded with such as might be otherwise as well provided for, and that the poor would be excluded the benefit and preference they ought to receive from fuch an institution; and alfo, that the annual fubscriptions expected from all the monthly meetings in the nation, would be too much appropriated to the use of those who might afford to pay for their children elsewhere; from whence, discouragements being thrown out to friends in eafy circumstances sending their children, the school has much fewer candidates, and the defign of it not fo fully answered. These objections would be removed, if friends were more liberal and unconfined in their views, as to numbers or stations in life, and were so far from excluding, either the rich or the poor, as to be concerned for, and feel after the propriety of extending their accommodations, and diffusing their endeavours for the admission of all who offered, and by opening a door for those of ability to pay sufficiently for their children, they might also provide a means for the relief of such as require the help of others in bearing their burdens, remembering that, "the liberal deviseth liberal things, and by liberal things shall they stand."

Upon the whole, it is evident that all children ought to be confidered as proper objects of fuch an institution; for, in general, even the situation of the rich, as to their prosperity in the truth, is as much to be compassionated as the poor; being often educated with ideas and impressions more repugnant to gospel simplicity, and less inured to the felf-denial of a christian, than the offspring of fome who labour under difficulties in temporal things. When parents are wife enough to feel disposed to place their children in a situation, so favourable for the growth of virtue, and fo oppofing the ambitious views, and prefumptuous endeavours after felf-exaltation, it would be greatly to be lamented, if fuch were excluded from a feminary, which under the peculiar care of the fociety, is better inspected, regulated, and furnished with religious officers, than private schools can often experience. And as, by this institution, a religious education and improvement in useful knowledge, is offered to the acceptance of friends for their children, upon moderate terms, and a place large M enough enough for the prefent prepared, there is no doubt but that by an indifcriminate mixture of children belonging to our fociety, divers advantages to their future steppings in life may arise.

There is in one quarterly meeting, a fund for the affiftance of those, whose parents and monthly meetings may be unequal to bear the expenses of their children's education, &c. This fund has been extensively beneficial; the interest is appropriated to pay one half the eight Guineas for each object; and the rest left to be raised either by the children's connections, or their monthly meetings.

For the further information of those who may be, in some measure, strangers to this institution, a state of the accounts respecting the same for the year 1791 is subjoined. A Report of the State of Ackworth School, the 31st of the 12th Month, 1791.

An Inventory of the Estate and Essects belonging to, and of Debts owing by, this Institution, the 1st of the 1st Month, 1792.

A Report of the State of ACKWORTH	SCH	O	DL,
the 31st of the 12th Month, 17	91.
The Income and Expenditure this Year	have	beer	a as under, viz.
INCOME.	£.	s.	d.
Donations and Legacies, as per List -	392	7	0
Annuitants deceased	250	o	0
Annuitants deceased Annual Subscriptions, as per List	250 871	6	10
Bills of Admission; 287 with Children?	2410
educated, at 81. 8s. per Annum - 5	2410	10	0
Ditto, Over-time, 66 Weeks, at 5s. per ?	16	10	_
Week 5		10	0
Interest of 3 and 4 per Cent. Annuities -	226
John Fothergill's Annuity, 1 year's dividen	nd 50	0	0
Rent of New Inn, and Land, 1 Year 241.
Ditto, of a Cottage and 5 Acres of }	35	0	0
Land, 1 Year 111.
Balance of Farm Account	356	16	112
Total Income this Year	4608	16	91
Total Income this Year Total expended this Year	3971
Increase in Favour of the Institution -	637
Balance of Stock the 1st of the 1st?	_
Month, 1791, 5	8712	5	03
Improvements on the Estates since they were purchased, estimated at 1000 0
The following articles reckoned in last year's Inventory are discontinued, viz.
Improvements at N. Inn 34 0 4x
Trees in the Garden 4000
Cart-house, &c 90 0 0
Washing Mill 100 0 0
264 04	I.
264 0 49 £.735 19 73	L
Errors in Bills of	*
Admission - 42 5 0
D° in stating the cost Prices of 3 & 4 per Cent. Stocks 487 15 0
	205	19	72
Balance of present Stock, the 31st of 12th Month, 1791, as per the fol-	OFFE	17	0
lowing Inventory	2777	-/	,

EXPENDITURE.	£.	s.	đ.
House Expenses; in Provisions, Coals, &c. 1	880	0	94
Clothing for Children	831	16	74
Salaries and Servants Wages	545	4	10
Interest paid to Annuitants, at 5 per Cent.	212	1	0
Repairs, including the new-making and enlarging of the principal drain from the building	124	14	61/2
Conveyance of Children at 2d. per Mile, } exceeding 50 Miles }	130	10	8
Stationary	60	19	41/2
Furniture, Bedding, Linen, &c. for Wear and Tear	100	I 2	112
Apothecary Account; Salary, Drugs, &c.	42	4	4
Contingencies	17	17	5 🕏
Garden	25	1	8

Total expended this Year - - - 3971 4 22

An Inventory of the Estate and Effects belonging to, and of Debts owing by, this Institution, the 1st of the 1st Month, 1792.

Belonging to the Institution. L.	5.	d.
The Estates at Ackworth, cost 8952	11	Q
* Improvements on faid Estates 1000	0	0
ical, coll	18	01
Consolid. 4 per Cent. Annuities 5,500l. cost 4328	.15	•
Three Months Interest due thereon - 55	ó	0
Confolid. 3 per Cent. Annuities 2001. cost 143	5	0
Six Months Interest due thereon 3	ó	0
John Fothergill's Ann. 1 year's Interest due 25	0	0
New Inn and Land, half Year's Rent due 12	0	0
Cottage and 5 Acres of Land, 3 Quarters due 8	5	. 0
Furniture; Linen, Bedding, &c. on hand 1673	4	8
Farm; Cattle, Hay, Oats, &c. ditto 678	19	0
House Expenses; Provisions, Coals, &c. ditto 473	9	93
Clothing for Children, ditto 312		7
Stationary; Books, Paper, Quills, &c. ditto 151	15	4
Continuencies Money lent on leaving)
School, to be returned 5	16	0
Ditto due for 45 Children who have had \ 47	5	0
the billan Tox J
	12	9
Bills of Admission; due for 43, and Forty-Seven Weeks 51	13	•
Drugs, Medicines, &c. on Hand 45	17	11
	15	8
Balance in the Treasurer's Hands - 107	-	81
18201	12	31

^{*} The Money expended under the Head repairs, (which includes Improvements fince the Estate was purchased) in the course of more than twelve Years, amounts to near Four Thousand Pounds.

Owing by the Institution.	£.	5.	d.
Annuities at 5 per Cent. on the Life of a Subscriber and Nominee }	4150	0	0
American Committee, due to them -	2679	16	104
Childrens Account, due to 299 now in the House, being for Time unexpired	1357	6	0
Barclays and Tritton, due to them } when outstanding Drafts are paid	429	3	8
Bills of Admission, for 3½ for 1792 -	29	8	0
Balance of Stock in favour of the Insti- tution, the 1st of the 1st Month, 1792	9555	17	9

18201 12 34

AN

ACCOUNT

OF

YORK SCHOOL

The following account of an inflitution at York, written by Sarah Grubb, was also found among her papers: and as she was one of its supporters, and it appears to be connected with the preceding subject, it is judged proper to introduce it in this place.

As the school at Ackworth did not received children but within certain limitations as to age, &c. something further, by way of appendix, was found necessary; viz. a school somewhat similar to Ackworth, which could receive girls of any age or description, whose parents or guardians inclined to submit them to the rules of the house; where a steady religious care might be exercised, uninfluenced by any pecuniary considerations, and instructions afforded in useful learning and house-wisery.

M 5

One.

One friend having felt her mind under a folid concern for the establishment of something of this kind, imparted it to divers others, as truth opened the way; and they finding a concurrent engagement, were willing to unite a little property and attention, for the opening and carrying of it forward; in expectation that others would be concerned to succeed them, for its future continuance and support.

As an overfight fuperior to what might be expected from fuch as should be placed in the station of mistresses, appeared to be proper, one friend, (her husband uniting therein) offered herself to the fervice; and several religious young women of improving abilities, were engaged to step in, for a time, as teachers, &c. without expectation of any pay or reward, save that peace which is the consequence of disinterested faithful labour.

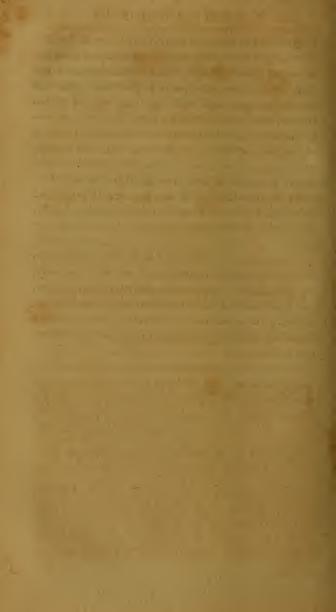

A fum was accordingly raifed, a fuitable house provided to accommodate about thirty girls, and furnished in a plain, useful manner, at the expense of the proprietors; except the parlour and a lodging room, which the superintendents were intended more particularly to occupy, and which are furnished at their own expense.

They also pay to the institution an ample sufficiency for their own living in the family.

Simplicity of manners, and a religious improvement of the minds of youth, were the principal objects in view of the friends who established this school; and therefore, whatever has a tendency to obstruct this work, is cautioned against, and such apparel apparel as the children bring with them, if deemed inconfishent with the plainness which truth leads into, is not allowed during their residence here; nor such literary publications as unprofitably elate the mind, and give a disrelish for the purity of gospel truths; but a knowledge of useful history and geography, as additional branches of learning to those of reading, writing, arithmetick, and the English grammar, are by no means disapproved. And whilst a careful attention is paid to the improvement of the children in necessary needle-work and knitting, all that is thought merely ornamental, is uniformly discouraged.

The girls make their own beds, fweep their own rooms, and take it in turns, by couples for a week, to wait at the superintendent's and girls tables; and such as are set apart for that service, are subject to be called upon in extraordinary cases, to affist in preparing victuals, and other necessary employments in the family.

N. B. Each girl pays at entrance fourteen guineas for learning, board and washing.

SOME

REMARKS

O N

CHRISTIAN DISCIPLINE,

AS IT RESPECTS THE

EDUCATION OF YOUTH.

HE Author of the Christian religion came to redeem and fave from that spirit which opposed the coming of his kingdom. He has wonderfully displayed the efficacy of that good, by which evil is overcome, proving through the whole of his dispensations a coincidence of mercy with justice. And the operation of this benign principle appears to be in no case more necessary and profitable, than in the true support and discharge of the duties which we owe to those who are placed under our superintendence and care.

As there are dispositions manifest in children, after the knowledge of good and evil is contracted, which degrade the mind from that innocency wherein they were first created, and which like an evil tree (if suffered to grow,) will produce unwholesome fruit; so there is also in the power of those who have rightly the care of them, a means which may, by the concurring operations of truth, be rendered effectual to the reduction thereof: and as both the disorder and the remedy lie deep in the heart, they must be sought for there, without the love of superiority, a carnal judgment of goodand evil, or the insluence of felf-will.

To bring children to a true and profitable fense of their own states, and direct them to the spiritual warfare in themselves, is the main end of all religious labour on their account; and herein a fingle eye ought to be kept to the witness of truth in their minds, for that must be visited and raised, before they can fo fee, as to repent and convert from evil. When this is the principal object in the view of those, who consider themselves as delegated shepherds, accountable for the preservation of their flock, they are religiously engaged to promote it by fuch means as are put into their power, under the influence of a christian spirit; which preferves from a defire of occasioning fuffering, or more of it than is absolutely necessary for the obtaining of that end, gives patience to persevere in labour without fainting, strength to bear and forbear in their waitings for the springing up of the good feed, and opens an eye of faith to look for, and depend only upon, the bleffing on their endeavours.

deavours. Hereby the conduct of such is deeply instructive to children; and may seal upon their minds the pious concern of their preceptors, and affectionately endear them in a friendship lastingly profitable, when they prove, through the instuence of divine love upon their own understandings, the justice, mercy, and nobility of that christian discipline which has been exercised towards them, and whereby they have obtained sweet communion with, and an opening to, the fountain of good in themselves.

If in our passage through life, we are often brought to acknowledge that of ourselves, without divine affiftance, we can do nothing, is it not abundantly obvious in the work of bestowing a religious education on youth? and should any wifdom prefide over that " which cometh down from above, and is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be intreated, full of mercy, and full of good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrify?" It is lamentable to fee how people in general, and even fome who feek the fense of truth on other occasions, feem to consider themselves, at any time, or in any disposition, qualified to inftruct and correct children, without perceiving that their own wills require to be first subdued, before they can acceptably be instrumental in subduing the will of others. Though acts of indifcretion, or feverities, may have a tendency to humble those who receive them (through whose fincerity all things work together for good, even as perfecution has been bleffed to thousands) yet the instruments are by no means acquitted thereby, their conduct conduct not being the produce of that faith, which worketh by love, to the purifying of the heart. It is not to be expected but that there is referved for fuch, a proportionate degree of fuffering, to that which, in their own wills, they have occasioned to others: though, by their natural understanding only, their perception of divine recompense may not be clear enough to distinguish it, yet a righteous retribution, or receiving that measure themselves which they have meted to others, may await them.

" Provoke not your children to wrath," faid the apostle. A conduct may be exercised towards youth, which being under the influence of the passions, has a natural tendency to raise a similar return. To punish a child because it has offended us, without the discovery of an evil defign, is to act under an unchristian spirit, which revenges injuries. This is a disposition which is apt to receive its gratifications from a flattering, cringing spirit, and from such marks of respect as originate in an impure spring of action; and hence, teachers of children may, from a superficial judgment, approve and strengthen the little pharisees under their care; whilft the pure life that is struggling in the hearts of some who resemble the publican, is crushed and difregarded. Many and deep are the forrows of the childhood of some, which proceed from different causes: and doubtless that incapacity wherein they are placed for obtaining redrefs from real grievances, and the abuse of power being strengthened in those from whom they receive them, may be numbered among these affecting occasions. Many children, even in our fociety, have a loofe unguarded education, and grow up as degenerate plants of a strange vine, having very little care exercifed towards them, except to indulge their unruly appetites, and paffionate defires: these require the yoke to be laid upon them with caution and true judgment, lest more should be commanded than they possess abilities to perform, and so their deficiency be unjustly laid to their charge: yet the cultivation of their minds should be steadily purfued, under that holy affiftance without which we can do nothing acceptably. Past experience does not appear to be a fufficient qualification for this, any more than for other religious fervices, even where it has been right, and much less so when it has not been strictly under the influence of that wifdom, which is pure and without partiality.

Wisdom and strength must be waited for, day by day, for the right performance of our duties, before Him who weighs our actions in the balance of pure justice, and only approves those which are wrought in the spirit. To educate children religioufly, requires a quietude of mind, and fympathy in their guardians, with the state of the good feed in them, which will lead rightly to difcriminate between good and evil; to discover the corrupt fource of many feeming good actions; and to perceive that a real innocency is the root of others, which custom, and a superficial investigation, have rendered reprehensible. Here we see the necessity of true wisdom being renewed, and the insufficiency of that which is carnal, and boafts its own experience and strength. It is the humbled mind to which is unfolded fuch mysteries of true godliness, for its own edification, and that of those under its care, as could not have been received in the support of a false consequence, and the love of superiority. If children are to be instructed in the ground work of true religion, ought they not to discover in those placed over them, a lively example thereof? or ought they to fee any thing in the conduct of others, which would be condemnable in them, were they in fimilar circumstances? Of what importance then is it for guardians of children, to rule their own spirits; for when their tempers are irritable, their language impetuous, their voices exerted above what is necessary, their threatenings unguarded, or the execution of them rash, however children may for a time fuffer under these things, they are not instructed thereby in the ground work of true religion; nor will the witness of truth, as their judgments mature, approve a conduct like this; though through the bias of felf-will, it may be adopted in fimilar cases, in a succeeding generation, by those who, instead of having gathered good feed, have, from the mixture of their education, preferred the bad, which meeting with a foil fuitable to its nature, grows and becomes fruitful, to the corrupting of many more.

The love of power is fo deeply implanted in the natural mind, that without we discover it, and its evil tendency, in the true light, we are not likely to consider it as an enemy of our own house, against which we are called to war with as much righteous zeal, as against the evil in others; yea with

that

with more, because it is declared such are our greatest foes. Where this corrupt part is cherished it stains our actions; and having gained the ascendency over the pure, lowly feed, bribes and influences the judgment respecting good and evil, and establishes the mind in a self complacence, which, however productive of reproof, has feldom an ear open to that instruction by which itself stands condemned. The prodigal display and use of power is the very destruction of christian discipline. Power is necessary; not to be assumed in the will of the creature, but to stand subservient to the judgment of truth, under which it ought to be exerted; lying in ambush as a waiting, affifting force, ready to be called in cases of difficulty; when, if it step forth in true dignity, the appearance, rather than the use of it, may generally prove fufficient, and its wife retreat render it still more useful and reverenced. True love, clearness of judgment, and the meekness of wisdom, are the supporters of true dignity; and where these prevail in a mind under divine government and control, they give authority, firmnefs, and benevolence, in thought, word, and deed; which have a profitable and comfortable effect upon those who are placed under their influence, and open a door for undifguifed familiarity, and affectionate intercourse, wherein children receive instruction more suitably and cordially, than under the arbitrary fway of a continually assumed power. Should we lay hold of christian discipline in all its branches, and return with it to its root, either among children or in the church, we shall always find it originates in a christian spirit, and that every plaufible appearance which is defective in this ground, is fo far no better than founding brafs, or a tinkling cymbal.

The right education of children, especially in boarding-schools, is no doubt a close and arduous work; those, however, who are rightly engaged therein, and endeavour after their own refinement, and an increasing acquaintance with the Fountain of Purity in themselves, need not have their eve outward for the establishment of power and authority; for He who feeds the ravens and clothes the lilies, knows what they stand in need of, and is able, out of his own treasury, to supply all their wants; to be "mouth and wisdom, tongue and utterance;" and will not fail to help under their greatest difficulties, if they support a patient dependence upon Him alone, and profitably live under the persuasion, that when He shuts, no one should attempt to open, and when he opens, none can fhut.

EXTRACTS

EXTRACTS

FROM

LETTERS

WRITTEN BY

SARAH GRUBB.

CHEFFIELD 5th month 1772*—I cannot but wish to spend a few weeks with thee, either here or at York; but as I am fensible it is not good for any of us to have our inclinations gratified at all times, I am defirous to be eafy, and refigned to every thing that may cross my natural propensities; that so, when affliction and probation may prefent themselves, which certainly will attend our pilgrimage through this uncertain stage of life, I may be the more strengthened to undergo these trying feafons with patience and fortitude. But I may conclude with the words which thou haft repeated before; "to will, is present with me, but to do, I know not:" for though this fortitude and refignation are things much to be defired, yet to be entirely given up to the will and disposal of a kind providence, is no easy attainment. Thou mentioned mentioned the difference of our fituations; and it would be ungrateful if I did not confider, and look upon my privileges, as favours from indulgent heaven, if I make a proper use of them. But it is the state of the mind that limits our happiness; and alas! it is the want of a sufficient care in the cultivation of my mind, that is a means of obstructing that peace which it would be sweet to enjoy.

^{*} In the 16th year of her age.

YORK, 7th month 1773—I often think our troubles are much augmented, by looking on those who are in a more advantageous station, according to our opinion; when, if we could but content ourselves with putting their many mortifications, to balance the adverse conditions of some on whom external circumstances seem never to have smiled, and whose life has been a series of affliction, it would amply compensate for the labour. Due consideration would make our forrows appear greatly short of what providence might have allotted for us, and would frequently prove them to be the result of passion, or imaginary ills.

York, 4th month 1774—Thy Letter was falutary and grateful, arriving when my mind was anxiously concerned on many accounts. The care of fo large a family, thou wilt readily own, must engross a large share of my attention; it is a task to which I often think myself unequal, especially among children; but that I am willing to make the best of, if I may but be enabled so to conduct, as to give no real cause of offence, nor to example in any thing that is contrary to the simplicity of truth. Under these considerations, I fee my own infufficiency, and how unable I am to act the part of an elder fifter, without a daily fupport from the Fountain of every good. What should we do, were there nothing to fly to but the instruments, the publishers of the gospel? what aid can they lend us? what strength in weakness, in comparison of that inward stay, which, if enough looked unto, would be the staff of our lives! And with this gracious privilege, how mournful is it to consider the preference that is given to the foibles of this transitory life, before that true peace which slows from the Divine monitor, the teacher within!

YORK, 8th month 1775—And now permit me to tell thee how welcome a part of thine was; it led me, when I read it, to conclude, that after looking on all the frailties of human nature, and perplexing ourselves with a view of the various and intricate scenes of this life, the necessary refult should be, "to be quiet, and mind our own business;" or, as thou sayest, to endeavour to feel ourselves approved by Him who sees not as man fees. If we make welcome every obstacle that is presented in the way to peace, we may justly conclude that we shall never arrive at the peaceful Jerusalem, the quiet habitation which cometh down from God out of heaven. The confideration of this enjoyment, fometimes prompts the mind to foar, or to afcend gradually to the holy mountain, where we may be taught the ways of righteoufness, and be instructed in the paths of true peace: but how fast we descend to the place from whence we came! how precipitately do we drop into fome region of darkness! for furely there are many degrees; but happy are they who are redeemed from its power. May we not justly deem ourselves, when under any entanglement, any fetter that prevents our deeds being brought to the true light, the light of the Lamb, as alienated, in part, from the Father of mercies, and estranged from His celestial spring! how necessary therefore is it for us to watch at all feafons, in times of peace, as well as in the spiritual warfare; for we know not when the hour of temptation cometh, and our fortification may prevent the engagement. How preferving is that language; "I will get me to my watch tower;" and what a favour it is, our not being ignorant, that the name of the Lord is a tower to the righteous.

10th month 1777—I expect this will find thee at ———, where I wish thy visit to be attended with more folid satisfaction than thou looked for; if not, it may be no less profitable. My very small experience has taught me, that endeavouring to keep near to the Fountain of life, in company where its arisings are evidently suppressed, often tends more to our real growth in the root of true religion, than the easy enjoyment of valuable friends company, with whom we are not driven to our refuge.

12th month 1777—I doubt not but thou hast thought, with myself, the conduct of the generality of young men to be painful; for what numbers do we see of these, who, prompted by the irregularity irregularity of youthful fervour, fuffer their minds to be entangled with every fluttering object of vanity; little confidering that they are expofing themselves to innumerable forrows, and inconsiderately and rapidly pursuing an Ignis-fatuus, which will lead them into a labyrinth of perplexities. Oh! could they, instead of this, centre and retire to that reverent fear in themselves, which would prove a fountain of life, preserving from the snares of death, there is no reason to doubt that the inexhaustible Fountain, would not only turn their feet into the path of peace, but so far establish their goings therein, that every important concern of their lives would be favoured with divine direction; and in that very momentous one of marriage, the language of truth would be fo intelligible as to direct them to the right object; and then, with what holy confidence might they propose these connections, while our fex, with an humble awful diffidence, wait also for counsel from on high, and to feel the fame affurance of divine approbation: thus all would be confummated to the praife of Him whose favour they had fought and implored. Much do I wish that my heart may ever be favoured to possess a degree of this primitive purity, though no matrimonial confiderations require it; the faying of the Apostle often occurs to my mind; "that godliness is profitable unto all things."

7th month 1778—We are now again left with the care of a family that requires some attention and circumspection. I never selt more unsit for the task, nor more ready to query, who is equal to it, and to conclude, furely not I. A difcreet conduct, an affectionate behaviour, attempered with just so much steady authority as to excite respect united to an unavoidable love, and these not to fluctuate with the fituation of the mind, is an attainment which I fear will never be mine, and which indeed will be unnecessary in a very few years with respect to my fisters; but yet it does appear, at least in my eyes, absolutely requisite for those on whom the education of children devolves. Where people are thus qualified, and discharge their duty, they will find a pleasure with the important charge; "for in it there is a happiness as well as care." There is certainly fomething in the affectionate part of us, which tends rather to defeat, than promote the growth of true religion, except it be fanctified under the operation of the divine hand; when that is happily experienced, fome of the natural propenfities become bleffings, and very laudably heighten the enjoyment of fpiritual ones.

already heard of the unfettled flate we have lately been in, occasioned by a forrowful and affecting event, the death of our dear friend——. She seemed but just arrived at the summit of earthly happiness, and to have conferred the same enjoyment upon her beloved partner; yet alas! how transient was the duration of this state; and indeed, how unsit is it for minds who are too apt to rejoice in prosperity without trembling, and whose affections are centred only in social comforts! We cannot but conclude that, by these instructive instructive lessons of mortality, the divine intention is to refine and purify, and to shew all who behold them the necessity, the great necessity, of having our minds centred where fluctuating things can never come. This was, beyond a doubt, the happy fituation that her mind was in fometime before her departure; for about a week before her death, she told her husband, " that her mind was fleadily fixed upon the joys to come;" and added, "I am fensible I shall not recover; and I have now been where they were finging Hallelujah's to the Highest, and it was pleasant in my ears. I have feen the beautiful fituation of the inhabitants of the new Jerusalem:" with many fimilar expressions, which I have hardly either leifure or room to insert; but the foregoing will give thee an idea of the comfortable state her mind was in, which she appeared to preserve to the laft.

The two following pieces of religious poetry appear to have been composed, the first, in the year 1778, foon after her return from a visit to fome of her friends, and the latter, fome confiderable time afterwards; and as they are folemn and instructive lines, and describe the pious and exercifed frame of her spirit, they claim a place in this collection. Though the possessed a considerable talent for this fort of composition, yet she cultivated it but little, and very rarely indulged herfelf therein; this may have proceeded from an apprehension, that it too often tends to draw out, and habituate the mind to a display of unfelt sentiments; a too high colouring, if not a false N 2 representation, representation, of things; and a decoration of language inconfishent with the simplicity of truth. It is, indeed, a talent which, in its exercise, requires very great circumspection; and, in the reading to which it leads, a religious guard and limitation.

Though clothed now with ease, tho' the pure

Of focial converse and congenial love Now offers me its balm, yet doth my foul, In retrospect, far other scenes survey, Far other fources for energic pow'rs. How can my pen pourtray the deep diffress, How paint the anguish of a heart that bled, Or how describe the current as it flow'd From forrow's briny deeps! It fails; and loft In recollection's maze, the mind that felt, Can only now explore the ambient main, Which, with impet'ous hafte, my little bark O'erflow'd, and feem'd to fink it in th' abyfs. But fay, why funk it not? by what kind hand Was it fustain'd? or why was it not driv'n Against that rock, on which so many split, And pour their mournful accents to the waves? 'Twas not thyfelf that did support; 'twas not Thy ftrength bore up: thou canft not thus convert Th' o'erwhelming furge of mourning into joy. Then who? that great I AM, that Majesty Who made the bush his temple, and whose slames Confum'd it not; who breaketh by his word, And with confolatory bands binds up; Did he not condescend to intervene?

Did he not fay? "be still, it is enough," Yea, with compassionate regard, pour'd in
The wine and oil. Forget it not, my soul!
Nor seek a greater joy: yet patient be
In suffering; in seasons of distress,
When nature pours her bitters in thy heart,
When heav'n seems brass, and earth with iron bars
Doth hold its cheering goodliness from thee;
Then with a calm resigned mind give up,
Freely surrender all thou callest thine;
No longer rest on Jordan's banks, but with Stability step in, and learn to know
That stones there are which for memorials serve;
Then bring them up from thence, as proofs where

Haft been, and therewith raise thine Ebenezer. But ah! how thoughtless in this prosp'rous state, Which now I view, but not with equal eye; Yet humbled in the dust, implore thy aid, Thy care, thou benefactor kind! or how Can I, amidst each smiling scene, select And cull the chiefest and the best of all That's offered? How render thee thy due For benefits, "thy mercy and thy truth? Through ev'ry dispensation of thy love, Through ev'ry min'stration of thy judgments, Grant, ah! grant, a self-abased spirit; That so, thy great supreme commands, thy will May be obey'd, and mine as clay be form'd.

And ye, my friends! who lately were and are The fweet endear'd companions of my life, Ah! may we long each others bleffings share; Soften each forrow, intermix each joy, With unity of fpirit foar above
These transitory things, and as we rise,
Together drink the well refined wine;
And in that pure and purifying stream,
Which from the throne of the most High proceeds,
Witness our minds repeatedly baptiz'd.

My foul ascends in humble flight
Above these transient woes,
And fill'd with songs as in the night,

She to the mountain goes

With harp and pipe, to celebrate The praise of Zion's King,
And with a weaned mind prostrate,
An humble off'ring bring.

Prepare the off'ring, facred flame, And confecrate my ground, That, by the virtue of thy name, Acceptance may be found.

Thy gracious majesty that deigns
The contrite soul to hear,
Thy wisdom that forever reigns,
Bid humbled minds draw near.

Shall I repine then to prefent The off'ring of my will, Shall I ungratefully confent Th' immortal birth to kill? Forbid it Lord! and aid my foul
The conflicts to endure,
Which, thro' thy merciful control,
Make all things new and pure.

O grant thy all-fustaining arm
My drooping mind to bear,
And with thy confolations warm
Preferve me from despair.

Thou know'st the tribulated path,
Which leads from death to life,
Thou know'st the baneful dragon's wrath,
His enmity and strife.

Thy light and truth, most gracious God, Withhold not from my foul; Nor yet thy wise chastising rod, Nor David's washing pool.

In faith and patience, centre deep The my'steries thou reveals; And, with an everlasting sleep, And thy immortal seals,

Envelope each unworthy view;
That fanctified aright,
Thy glorious cause I may pursue,
And witness to the light.

Thus thro' the few succeeding steps.

Appointed me to run,

Thy honour may be all in all,

Thy praise alone be sung.

1st month 1779—The re-establishment of our own, or our friends health, from the verge of that eternity to which we are hastening, ought to excite deep gratitude of mind, and lead to a still greater degree of obedience and preparation for the final call. The feafons which I passed, and the meditations with which my mind was supported, when watching over my departing friends, are, I think I may fay, continually before me. How low and how grovelling appeared every mundane thing! How infignificant the most defirable connections in life, when compared with that certain portion of happiness, that unbounded sphere of felicity, which is reserved for the pure in heart! even the strong ties of friendship and love were subservient to these feelings; infomuch that I have queried, when reflecting how these fetters to our dissolution were removed, whilst those important prospects were before me, "what ailed thee, oh thou fea, that thou fleddest, thou Jordan, that thou wast driven back, ye mountains, that ye skipped like rams, and ye little hills, like lambs!" But alas! this lafted not long; for when the folemn, awful messenger had proclaimed liberty to a captive fpirit, and translated it to where mine could not ascend, then arose every natural emotion, and instructed me, that in a continual warfare confisted my peace. But what can I now fay? for on these things, as on the manna that was gathered yesterday, am I too apt to live, without enough feeking the fresh descendings of celestial food, and patiently submitting to that creative power, which would form us into the state of a little child. The aptitude of my disposition to rife above the humbling principle of truth, and form form to myself a likeness which may be compared to a marble statue, or an image of substantial good, often leads my mind into deep lamentation and mourning; with a painful fear, that I shall never be intitled to the handing forth of the royal scepter, the mark of divine approbation; but to that sentence of depart, and being set as on the lest hand: yet when we survey these sleeting moments, or rather look over them to the endless ages that ensue, we cannot but conclude, that nothing short of a state of infatuation would lead us to exchange, or even risque our everlasting well-being, for the very best things of this world.

4th month 1779-Alas! how is a large degree of truth, inward excellence, and whatever conftitutes true loveliness, removed! how is the beauty fallen! Affecting instance to us her friends; but to that immortal fpirit in her which has long, in prospect of a future glorious admission into the celeftial regions of light, been willing to descend: into the deeps, and there behold the marvellous works of Him whom she served, it is a happy lot. Though she suffered much, though forrow came in the night, in the close of a world wherein she had many troubles, yet joy has, I doubt not, fprung in the morning, in the opening of an endless day. How justly may we rejoice on her account, who was counted worthy of fo early an entrance to where the aged can but hope to be, and whose work is done: a circumstance which the impatient mind, I believe, often wishes for. A lamentation for those who knew her worth, and who hoped for a future uniting with her in the covenant of life, and of that wifdom which is from above, may, with unfeigned propriety, be adopted. For my own part, all that was within me, (when I found what thy intelligence was) feemed struck with amazement, and was lost for a time in reflection on her great and awful change; but when I recollected myfelf, that she was forever removed; and that, through the intricacies of life, I was left to move without her friendly affiftances, and fellow-feeling mind, a deep fense of mourning ensued: for from fo short, and even from a long intercourse, I think I never reaped so much solid benefit with any. And alas! short fighted as I was, I imagined it an earnest of some future fellowship in this life; and that through the various trials that attended it, a providential help might be dispensed us through each other. But now, I find it was the fulness allotted us, and that, like Jonah's gourd, it sprung to me in a night, and has withered before the brightness of the day; withered in a time wherein my weakness leads me too much to lean on fuch helps. But this flock relaxes the defire, and points to the strong tower, the refuge of the righteous, where alone is true fafety; and oh! may we flee thither, for the habitation is quiet and fure. I very much fympathize with you in the present trial, the loss of so near and valuable a friend. Your attachment I believe was strong, and the feparation hard; but how much more profitable, if, instead of an unavailing forrow, we confider the church's loss; that one who filled an ufeful fphere is removed, and confequently, that that share is left to devolve upon the shoulders of fome; I fay, if we confider and look fufficiently at this, being willing to step, if required, into her path, path, (which I know was fecretly exercifed, not only for herfelf, but for the profperity of the great and noble cause,) and thereby redeem the loss, how acceptable must that tribute be, in the fight of Him who sees not as man sees; and, if it spring from a heart devoted to the work rather than the reward, how truly profitable to ourselves! The end of the righteous is desirable, in whatever stage of life it arrives; but for my own part, if I could hope mine would be such, I own I cannot help feeling a wish, that its approach might be in the early or middle part: in what the desire originates, I cannot pretend to say, but it is, perhaps, in some unjustissable part of self-love.

6th month 1779—How acceptable was thy account of the latter, and last end of our beloved friend! My mind often recurs to it for hope, and for strength to persevere and to obtain; but there appears fo much to constitute our claim to the peaceful abode, into which the righteous only can enter, that my mind enjoys but a fmall portion of faith to believe it will ever reach its confines; yet I am fometimes led to confider, whether our refearches after happiness, are not too much actuated by principles of felf-love; and whether it is confiftent with the benevolence which the gofpel inculcates, that in all our concerns, and the exercise of our greatest virtues, we should be continually inquiring after the reward: does it not, my friend, (for I really do not know) indicate a littleness of mind, and a want of confidence in Him who is, "just and equal in all his ways?" for in our works there is no merit to the creature; if we trust not, where is our faith? if we persevere not, where is our patience? and if in this life, we partake of the fulness of that joy which is sown for the upright, where is the glorious reserve for futurity? Should we not then, if our minds were clothed with the nobility of the spirit in which we believe, resign all things? and being humble, suffer all things? and do all things in pure love, exclusive of any selfish view?

In your county as well as ours, there are a few who have not bowed the knee, nor facrificed to the workmanship of men's hands, yet the general depravity does so often obstruct the current of life, and thereby stagger the feeble mind, that I believe you often experience, a feeking water and finding none; but fear not, for He in whom is the fulness of strength, is your refuge.

8th month 1779—Though I am firm in the belief, that if we experience the work of true regeneration, all our attachments must be tried in a furnace, which the natural understanding cannot of itself comprehend, and that the precious must be separated from the vile, by the mysterious operations of the divine hand; yet I do also hope, that ours will be permitted to stand, and that, if we live to survive the strength of that youthful ardour with which our present union is heightened, there will be enjoyed a fellowship, better and more pure than any we have yet experienced, and against which, all the stery darts of the enemy will never be able to prevail. This, and similar to this, is, next to the immediate influence of the divine presence, what I strongly covet to partake of, in this viciflitude and vale of tears; wherein a cup is fometimes handed, which is fo repugnant to our nature, that we cannot help entreating, let it, I pray thee, pass from me. But oh! that we may be found worthy to enjoy the celestial bleffings dispensed to the faithful, by obedience to that power, which in all its workings, tends to crucify felf, and prepare the mind to adopt that refined language of, " not my will, but thine be done." The more a mind possesses of that wisdom and nature, which act in opposition to the true simplicity of a little child, the greater must be the exercise; and if it has long refused the clear manifestations of duty, it is no wonder if a feafon of painful uncertainty enfues.

9th month 1779—Art thou in health? art thou strong in Him who goeth before thee, and who hath promifed that His glory shall be the rere-ward of the number that deal prudently, and go not by flight? Isaiah lii. 12, 13. How safe do the steps of such appear, who have this glory for a light to their feet, and the divinely illuminated lamp to attend their path! It is no wonder that a way should often open, where the human understanding (which is dark and comprehends not the things of the spirit) can see no way; and that every necessary refreshment should be interspersed therein. I fometimes think it is a favour, that an eye is opened into this path, and that though the advancement in it is small, if there be any, yet thus feeing, and preffing forward, we may obtain. I hope thou art treading this fure ground, and that thy memorials, which are brought from the bottom of the purifying waters of Jordan, are not hid; or if they be, that it is only for their refinement. But perhaps they are like the fling stones which David had ready in his bag, until the appointed time of meeting the defier of Ifrael was come, and are to be alike powerful in prevailing against the enemies of the poor, and the afflicted people, which may be spared in the day of general calamity. But be this as it may, obedience is still to be attended to, and the prophet's advice remembered, of not feeking to ourfelves great things, but to be content with every dispensation, whether of want or of plenty. When this fituation is in any degree attained, how thankful do we feel for even a small appearance of good; for if the divine prefence is no more beheld, than by the putting forth of His hand through the hole of the door, it still fustains and refreshes, and serves as food for many days.

10th month 1779—Poor — I feel for her frequently, and have often thought of writing to her; but it has as often occurred, that except the great Shepherd of Ifrael affift her, whence shall another do it? As his voice, his crook, and his protection, are undoubtedly offered, it is surely weak to suppose that the language of the creature can equal the voice of this Charmer; if indeed it do not derogate, (as I am inclined to think it does) from the omnipotence and wisdom of our holy head: and I sometimes think, that nothing more proves the deep rooted depravity of the human mind, even when measurably illumined with the brightness brightness and glory of the eternal excellency, than looking at the members for help, and craving it from that often poor, benumbed quarter, when, at the same time, it might be said, "you have an unction from the holy one, and you know these things."

1st month 1780—There appears to me, no joy like the joy of the righteous, nor any unity like theirs; and next to the immediate influences of the divine Spirit, it is to me defirable. But obedience being the terms of this great and valuable poffession, what numbers, for want of this, are deprived of it! Yet he who is infinite in condescenfion, and whose love is unutterable, deigns to reward for every little fervice, and grants, at times, a facred view of the mystery of his own church, and his marvellous work therein. My friend is, I doubt not, well instructed in these things, and though I also believe it is a time of suffering like Jacob's, when the fun confumed by day, and the frost by night, yet He who knows our necessary refinements, is able to limit the waters, that they do not overflow us, and, in his own time, will fay to the operation of the furnace, "it is enough." Until then, I trust deep will "utter unto deep," and with an increase of suffering, we shall experience an increase of holy fellowship.

3d month 1780—My dear friend's letter was too acceptable to lie long unacknowledged; because it revived in the breast of her friend all the cordiality of an union and fellow-feeling, which I trust do not originate in the part appointed for destruction;

but are rather the offspring of minds engaged, (though feebly) to travail on as in great weakness and fear, and fometimes having no language to express, either to the Fountain of good, or to one another, but "fighs unutterable." How infinite is the condescension of that precious influence, which helpeth these our infirmities, and is touched with a feeling of them; aiding the mind, with a degree of holy confidence, after all its apparent exclusions from the participation of divine good, once more to look towards his holy habitation. And as it is through fufferings that our natures are refined and fanctified, they must not be of our own choosing, because the fuffering might then, in a great meafure, cease, and that necessary heat which attends the furnace of affliction, and which purifies the mineral, get quenched; for fo depraved are our ideas of things, that I have thought, and in fome measure felt, that even in our baptisms of spirit, we would wish to have a choice; so active is felf, that it cannot be fatisfied without a fphere to move in. Think not, my beloved friend, that I consider this as a peculiar propenfity of thine: for it rather occurred as a degree of painful experience. I have often viewed your fituation, (and particularly fince the receipt of thine this morning) as almost too trying for flesh and blood, but He who placeth the members of his church, and appoints them their lots, does not leave their supports to flow through these corrupt sources; but marketh their steps, and, perhaps quite hiddenly, confirms the feeble knees, and leadeth them in a way they know not. My mind is frequently too much depressed, and sometimes tossed with tempests, to admit admit a confolatory fentiment, much less to offer my friend the language of encouragement; nevertheless I cannot help expressing my firm belies, that all your troubles will work together for good, and that the deeper they are, the greater will be the preparation for a glorious reward in the house of the one Father, with whom a book of remembrance is written.

4th month 1780-I want to hear how you feel yourselves at your new habitation, and whether it proves a Goshen to-, whose mind has often felt to me to be fecretly clad with fackcloth, even when perhaps obeying the command, "to wash and to anoint, rather than appear to men as if fasting:" and as this is a fituation necessary for us, its continuance administers no cause of discontent, if we have but an evidence that we have not stepped out of the holy inclosure; finding the fence of divine appointment to be about us, no matter what we fuffer. It is not for our rejoicings, and what feels comfortable to ourselves, that we can expect a reward; but rather for our trials and probations, if we endure them with patience; and even for these we have no reason to expect a full reward; for if that were the case, where would be the re-ferve for the fruition of joy in the life to come? Nevertheless, we do sometimes get favoured, in our wilderness journey, with a little bread handed in fecret, and with an opening of the brook by the way; and the remembrance of our partaking of this together, refreshes and strengthens in some gloomy feafons. I have often reason to number your friendly regard to me among the bleffings of my life, and I fometimes think, in the feeling of a nearness I cannot describe, that my affection to you is not less than filial. May I be preserved worthy this fellowship, and, by an increase of purity, find an increase of that union of spirit which lives beyond the grave! I think nothing has more conduced to my confidence in, and fellow-feeling with you, than the belief that your reproof and plain dealing would be as readily administered to me, as your encouragement: and I befeech you, never loose fight of this openness, for I am furely one of the weakest and most frail of the whole flock and family, if I am worthy to be included in the number: and yet if I know my own heart, it is not myself, but the cause which I have in view; and I wish for still more of that disposition which can enable us to fay, "let the righteous fmite me, and it shall be a kindness; let him reprove me, and it shall be an excellent oil."

5th month 1780.—How truly valuable is this precious unity which, like the oil that was poured upon the head of Aaron, remains to anoint the very skirts of the garments of those who have obtained the mark of discipleship, to love one another! In the renewal of it, I feel greater consolation than is usually bestowed upon me from causes of this kind, because there are sew indeed with whom I find myself nearly united, or whose regard affords me relief in the time of want, although I know them to be far superior to myself; insomuch that I conclude the command is certainly to me, "falute no one by the way." But glad I am that there is an exception to this, and that I hope I can

in the right line falute my friend by the way, and visit him in the wilderness, where all who are united to the true church must chiefly dwell, and wait for its redemption: and if this is not found in our time, we have yet reason to hope, that having partaken in some measure of its sufferings, whether principally for ourselves as members, or for the whole body, this offering will be acceptable to the Searcher of hearts; and, then if in His wifdom fome of our days should prove to be few and full of forrow, may we not look towards the morning of a better day, and an inheritance in that country whose inhabitants never say, they are sick! Were it not, now and then, for a little of this hope which lives within the vail, I know not how things would be got through; fo felfish am I that I fear the reward is too much an object, and not that perfect love which casteth out fear, and is ready to obey and fuffer all things for the work's fake.

oth month 1780—I have felt a more than usual impulse to salute thee, my much beloved friend, and, according to my little ability, to strengthen thee in repeating the efforts which I trust thou art, at times, concerned to use for thy own everlasting welfare, by turning a deaf ear to the subtil insinuations of the adversary, who is evidently seeking thy destruction. I am well convinced that no language I can use, except it be blessed with the efficacy, as well as appearance, of indisputable truth, will ever be acceptable to thee, or prove prositable; and it is, I may truly say, at this time particularly, the fervent engagement of my mind, that thou mayest come to a settlement in that power which is unchangeable, and which would, if thy anxieties and destructive heat of spirit were more damped, instruct thee still further in the mystery of thyself, and that of godliness which is profitable for thee. With what manner of love hath the Father loved thee? hath often in effect been the query and exclamation of my mind, when the wonders of thy deliverance from Egyptian bondage have occurred, with an evidence of the Hand that wrought them, and of that mighty power which hath caused the bush to burn before thee, and convinced thee that the ground whereon thou ftood was holy. As fure as ever he was with Ifrael, and with Mofes their leader, he is with thee; and thy trust in him, and feeking for a paffive ftate of mind in that wilderness travel which may be affigned, will, I believe, effect thy arrival at the Land of Promife. But think not, my beloved friend, when there is a want of water, and of that refreshment which the unmortified will is eagerly thirsting after, to use the means whereby the meekness of Moses was overcome, to strike the rock, and thereby offend that holy providential care, which will never have thee to fuffer for want of true knowledge, but will be found to provide thee with food in due feafon; and though it may not always be pleafant, but, at times, may refemble Mara's waters for bitterness, yet the spiritual Canaan being in view, and not expected on this fide Jordan, the river of true judgment, it will animate to still greater degrees of virtue, fuch as patience, fortitude, and strength, in this holy travail. Under a renewed belief that thou art in the place allotted by divine wisdom, I feel an earnest solicitude, that thou mayest be strengthened to discharge thy duty in every good word and work; and that He who hath plucked thy seet out of much mire and clay, may not only set thee upon the immovable Rock, and establish thy goings, but, in His own time, put such a song of deliverance into thy mouth, as will last to all eternity. It is, my dear friend, with a love which I trust is more than natural, that I re-salute thee, and bid thee be of good cheer, and labour to detect every delusion, for truly there is light enough for it.

10th month 1780-Animated with the effusions of much love and near fellowship, I have many times fecretly faluted you fince my abrupt departure from -; where I was thankful to feel, after a long fast from sensible enjoyments, either religious or focial, that there is yet an union to be attained with the spirit of pure love, and that we can in a state of mutability, in proportion to our faithfulness, partake together of its binding influence. A revival of this fense, I was and am, I hope grateful for, and glad to find a fimilar fentiment in my companion. I neither received, nor expected any great peace and reward for the offering of paying you a vifit, which was not completely of the free-will fort; but thus much I may fay, that a degree of comfortable ferenity attended my returning mind. My throwing myfelf in the way of meetings, in which my attendance has not appeared to be in the movings of light, is not, in my idea, without danger: for if we depend, though in ever fo finall a matter upon a putting forth which which has not a little clearness for its evidence, we may likewife conclude it to be equally fafe to offer our service from as doubtful an impulse; and thus, I am apprehensive, a clouded state may ensue. And having been accustomed to adopt things through perhaps a willingness to do good, which have not borne the royal impression, our distinguishing feelings may gradually become fo weakened, that the pure unmixed word may get fullied, and the powerful demonstration thereof decrease. This is a fentiment which I offer by way of apology for myself; and yet I would not have my friends to conclude, that I believe great openings are to be looked for, in every little fervice. If the token of rain be ever fo finall, yet if it be fo fure as to bear the comparison of the cloud of the size of a man's hand, I am of opinion, (though not always willing to accept it) that it is as much to be depended upon, as if the clouds were opened, and we felt the showers from thence. It is certainty, though ever fo little in appearance, that I wish to follow.

Ist month 1781—The trials which I believe are in infinite wisdom allotted to the rightly concerned, are many; of which, I trust, we have been favoured to share; yet we have no need to make our way harder, by adding so continually our own judgments, and discouragements upon them; making comparisons which we have no right to do, and weighing things which can only be tried in the balance of the sanctuary: for we know so little of things above us, that we are very incompetent judges who stand most in divine approbation. I cannot but much wish that —— would grow wifer respecting these things, and endeavour to shut out discouragements which do not come in the line of wisdom; and then, I am satisfied, she would find her way to be as easy as she thinks mine is, and would be convinced that her labours have been more acceptable to him who put her forth, than she will often allow.

1st month 1781—Does not Solomon fay, that a few words fitly spoken are like apples of gold in pictures of filver? I think he does; but whether or not, it is so in the scripture of my heart, and your lines prove the justness of it. Feeling has no fellow, and if the address be but felt by the receiver in the covenant of true love, it is fomething like fuch a ministry as I covet, where words are lost in power. Deceitful as I know my own heart to be, I will not allow that my remembrance of you arises wholly from "an imbibed favourable impression in times past," and that a personal abfence revives it. I should conclude that to be a formal attachment which hath nothing but age for its origin, and is not supported with repeated renewals of life. Is this the inward tie that no change can break? the love that many waters cannot quench, or the floods of affliction destroy? Surely it is not of that nature which can endure the fire, and be refined by it; it is more like the base metal which would rise as the scum and be loft, than the folid gold that appears afterwards, and is able to endure even the feventh purification.

3d month 1781—I think I have entered into my domestick station, with a degree of awfulness and fear, and not without an humble fense of the unmerited favours I received from divine condescenfion, and from my friends during the ceffation of it. And notwithstanding many deep trials attend our leaving home, when under an apprehension of duty, and many painful jealousies necessarily arise, lest the most important of causes should suffer, yet when we are in a fettled fatisfaction, or under the cares of a family, by not being fo frequently put upon a fense of our danger, and of our own unfitness to do good of ourselves, our minds are apt to lose their centre, by getting off the watch, and so become diffipated and carried away with trifling things; at least with things short of that certain treafure which is fecured out of the reach of either moth or rust; and then they become to us (however plaufible to that wifdom which cannot comprehend the mystery of godliness) unsubstantial trifles. Thus we fee the necessity of having a foundation of our own; and we need not that another should build upon us, but by that same power which directed the first stone, similar to what was and is laid in Zion, tried, elect and precious, whereby we may be built up in the most holy faith. I often find it my duty, strictly to fcrutinize into the moving cause of my steppings in various respects; and notwithstanding the greatest abasedness is my due, on viewing my own innumerable frailties and inability often to turn my mind availingly to the invincible fortrefs, even in times of deep probation; yet if there was not a fecret testimony in my heart, that it is much my lot to know an abstraction from human dependancies, my feelings would be insupportable, because I could

I could not look for that peace which is preferved from human mixtures and interruptions.

4th month 1781—Weary indeed I have felt myfelf of this changeable world for a few days past: perhaps it proceeds from too great an indulgence to that eye, which is viewing the discouragements of the present day, and which has cause to run down with water, for the flain of the daughter of Zion. How are the Aarons removed, and removing, and fuch as might feem likely to receive the garments, have the work cut short in righteousness! how do the standard-bearers faint, and how doth the enemy prevail in his transformations, in deceiving and drawing down even of the priesthood! In contemplating these things, I think I may fay, that I never felt my mind fimilarly clad with a state of fecret mourning and fackcloth, as fince you left us; infomuch that I am ready to inquire, who shall stand? or from whence can the watchers come, that will faithfully discharge their trust upon our walls in a future day? I am daily convinced of the great need there is for me frequently to be taken throughout in pieces, that no comeliness may remain to felf, nor manna be preserved from one day to another; that my own state, and the wilderness state of the church, may be (though not fully yet) clearly feen.

6th month 1781—I have, after contending my ground by inches, ventured to fet off towards a place which I have often looked at with a kind of dread and difinay; from an apprehension that it ftrongly resembles that great city Babylon, in which it is hard to be preferved from tasting of the cup, either in a greater or less degree; and where, if there even be preservation from this, deep suffering must be the consequence; a state not likely for sless and blood readily to enter into. I can truly say it is in great fear and abasement of mind, that I advance towards it; earnestly desiring to be kept to that power which discovereth the hidden things of darkness, and shews us the different sources of self-love.

11th month 1781—We are fometimes at a loss to account for our own actions, because they proceed from causes unsearchable to us, and which we are led infenfibly to comply with for our own good, that that part in us which is appointed for death, and which by means of the flaming fword, is totally separated from the tree of life, may receive no food nor vigour to support it. Since I faw thee, many and complicated have been the concerns and feelings of my mind; new causes and new anxieties have occurred, from which I have feen great need to procure a fecret dwelling in a quiet habitation, and to crave daily affishance to abide therein, that my own root might not be more impoverished; but that by an inward attention to the voice of the true Shepherd, a more intimate acquaintance with him might be cultivated, and a greater subjection of spirit experienced; whereby I should be more clothed with that true humility and pure fimplicity which are effential to the cause of righteousness, and necessary for the preservation of our minds in a state of acceptance with Him, who sees not as man fees, but who knows what His wifdom has prohibited to us, and marks our obedience.

Hew

How affecting was the removal of our beloved -! Silent aftonishment, and secret mourning, for an individual and general loss, was all the language I could use. My heart was indeed affected, and is not less so in the fresh feeling of a disfolved affectionate tie, and of the uncertainty of all our comforts and attachments, notwithstanding they may in prospect appear durable; but as we do believe there is an union which exists beyond the grave, a fellowship unconfined to these mortal bodies, how strong an incentive is it to purchase this permanent inheritance, though at the expense of our own fervour, and that friendship which is conceived in the false refinements of the human imagination; and which being tinctured with the gilded impurities and dregs of nature, becomes of that kind which is at enmity with God, because not subject to the power of His cross. To be stripped of ourselves, to be simple, to be fools in our own eyes, and in the eyes of others, are experiences not pointed to by our own dispositions, but are indifputably the way to that kingdom which flesh and blood cannot inherit. By yielding to this way, how humbly may we commemorate that power which gives according to our advancement, the victory over a host of opposition, and dims that eye in us in which our enemies are magnified; giving a holy confidence that binds up the mind, humbly exalts it above these momentary things, and, by measurably uniting us to itself, enables to difcern the origin of our feelings, and what proceeds from them, by tracing them to their fpring, and proving them in the light. Our experience is fmall, but, I trust we mutually long for that which is good; may we each be, more and more, drawn from every mixture of felf, and become as a weaned child!

12th month 1781-If I had known your plan of proceedings, it is likely I should have met thee with a few lines fomewhere; but a morfel of friendly converse, or a token of true regard, may, perhaps, be as acceptable now thou art returned to a more homely fare, and feeling a little more descent to some inferior service in the house, than was then allotted. Notwithstanding those that visit the true feed in this declining day, seldom find themselves, either secretly or publickly, mounted on the king's horse, but rather have to experience a baptism into its sufferings, and a fellowship therewith; yet even in this state, if our minds are kept low enough, and in a fituation ready to receive and dwell under the divine allotment, there is a strength attends it, of which the most favoured fervants, we have cause to believe, are often stripped on their return. No wonder then, if we, who are infants in this fervice, should be suffered to feel ourselves, as the dry bones in the open valley. Under this state of humiliation before Him who knows all things, and who wifely ftrips us of our judgment, in order to refine it; how beautiful that reply to the query, "can these bones live?" thou knowest oh Lord: in this humble situation, how ready are we to receive the refurrection of life, or to wait for it the appointed time until all unprofitable moisture is exhausted, and the seasons have passed over us! A most affecting circumstance it is, that a man, and indeed a family, ftanding

1st month 1782-My remembrance of thee was tenderly affectionate, and a folicitude accompanied it, that we may live fo near the pure life of truth, having our minds frequently stripped of whatfoever is tinctured with the gilded impurities of nature, as to feel an increase of unity therein. When I am led to confider my own aptness to get from under the power of the crofs, a fear is ready to enter, that the garments, the coverings of my mind, which may, in fome fmall degree, have been washed, will again gather their spots, and I become more and more reconciled to them; fo that the confequence may be an inability to distinguish betwixt the clean and the unclean. In this necesfary perspective of myself, the means of preservation have, in infinite condescension, been discovered; and a willingness frequently to descend to the washing pool, has proved the request of my heart, that He in whose hand I wish to feel myself, may not only be the reprover, but the remover of every opposer of His work. Discouragements arise from without, for on every hand there is cause of mourning, and the few stakes that can be perceived among us are ready to fail with weakness; wherefore we see the greater need, with all the vigilance we possess, to repair to that foundation which stands fure; and truly those who are established thereon have engraven upon them that indifputable feal, and most desirable evidence, of divine acknowledgment. Our pilgrimage here feems, and will prove, of fo short duration, that the fufferings which attend it for our refinement, are bleffings demanding our humble acknowledgment. I have often reflected upon your fituation with a fympathy which I trust is measurably of the right kind; and have felt the arduousness of your path, the stability that is required for it, and patient refignation of the cause to Him whose own works alone, or those of His own pure spirit can praise Him and effect true and profitable deliverance to his dependant children. "What can the wrath and envy of man (if we are tried with it) do unto those that are hid in the secret places of the Almighty, and gathered under the healing wings of the Prince of Peace? fince by his armour of light they shall be able to stand in the day of trial."

12th month 1782—I place little dependance on dreams; they are often a mass of confusion; but we are bound to acknowledge that they sometimes contain clear intelligent information or caution. I believe however, it is always safe to attend to the hint, "let him that hath a dream tell [it as] a dream," but the pure word should be spoken more freely, for what is the chast to the wheat? Thine was expressive of a union with thy friend which is comfortable to her, and from which it is the fervent desire of my mind we may receive strength and instruction in the future movements of our lives; wherein perhaps, if we are favoured to be of any fervice at all, it may go hand in hand; but what are all the emblems of this fellowship to the thing itself? what are the branches without the Root that bears them? I often wish the great objects in my eye may be folid and permanent; that visionary and delusive gratifications may be proved, by being brought in their infancy to the balance of the fanctuary; and that nothing may refift the fire in doing its office upon that which is light, and which has not been formed and tried in the hand of the Potter and Purifier of his people; but watchfulness is our best retreat, and I find that without it, in this land as well as in our own there is continual danger of being warped aside, and losing our attention to the secret reproofs and dictates of wisdom.

3d month 1782-I felt a satisfaction in hearing from thee, and finding that the exercises which had attended, were productive of that peace which never fucceeds our moving out of the line of pure wisdom, and is therefore an evidence of the Master's approbation; and what more do we wish for; for if that is experienced when we have broken the morfel of bread given to our charge, it is enough for us, and the bleffing must be left to that bountiful hand, which owns only its own works. Though poverty was the covering of my mind on my return home, yet I felt no uneafiness from an apprehension of having left thee too soon, but rather a belief that it was right for thee to 0 4 feel feel that thou wast stronger than thou apprehended: and I now hope, that as thou hast afresh sound the divine ability allotted thee, to be sufficient for the work of the day, that thou wilt be more devoted to move alone in suture, and become less dependant upon reeds shaken with the wind. It is an excellent thing simply to mind our own business, to attend to the path cut out for us individually, and let it be what it may, to be content therewith; because it is only by the members of the body thus keeping their places, that they can be made truly useful to one another, and prosperous in the cause wherein they are engaged.

3d month 1782-I can feelingly sympathize with my dear friend in her present situation of mind, and under fome difficulties, which may be increafed by the want of feeling, baptized elders, fuch as live near the spring of life themselves, and whose deep can call unto the deep in those whose line of fervice varies from their own. Where there are fuch as thefe, they are felt to be stakes in the divine enclosure about those I call the most tried of the flock, the poor messengers that blow the trumpet on the holy hill, and have to descend from thence into the deeps, and awfully to dwell there, humbled under a sense of themselves and what they are: and though in this day of weakness, each member does not keep in its own function, but numbness and insensibility have seized many, let us trust that our holy Head will not suffer us also to become castaways, if we attend to his direction. ——A fecret dwelling as in deep waters we know to be fafe; and, my beloved friend, may we keep there.

there, grow more and more united to the truth itfelf, and support one another in the fellowship thereof!

oth month 1782—When an unavailing anxiety has possessed my mind, about the situation of things among us, and the wilderness state of the church; I have been led to conclude that it is not confiftent with the divine will, that we should be ever impatiently inquiring, " what wilt thou do for thy great name? but that we should rather centre deep in our own minds, and refignedly and faithfully cooperate with his work in the earth; feeling our minds fo reduced as only to pray for that which is the mind of the spirit, even if it required the petition, " feed thy people with thy rod! In our late visit, we deeply felt, at times, our weakness, and when most baptized thereinto, with our eve fingle to divine help, we had humbly to observe, that then His strength was manifest in our weakness; and that it was only as we descended to the spiritual brook, and there received with fimplicity the heavenly armour, that the battle was bleffed, our heads covered therein, and ability found to discover the little ones on whom the purifying hand is turned. I believe I may fay we returned under the humbling impression of being unprofitable servants, begging to be enabled to continue suppliants at the gate of wisdom, and to attend in future to the smallest of its pointings. I need not tell thee how agreeable it was to meet my husband at my return home. On our feparation, the passage feelingly occurred to, and refreshed my mind; "Lord I have left all to follow thee." To be employed in the cause of truth, and to have the spirit thereof for my companion, appeared when nature was subordinate, far to surpass every selfish enjoyment in this life, notwithstanding I might prove a vessel of least honour in the family, and on our meeting again, I found there was need of a renewed engraving of these impressions, in order to preserve a preserence to the truth, and to keep in our remembrance that we have no continuing city here.

10th month 1782—It is an unspeakable favour, through all, to believe that, if we dwell in the pure life and oneness of the truth, many waters without, or floods of temptation within, will never be able to quench our love, though for a time, when they rife high, they may veil it. The prayer of my spirit is, that my dwelling may be in this hidden life, that I may prefer its substantial operations to either spiritual or temporal enjoyments, and that by it my body and mind may be preferved from running to and fro in the earth, with any blast from the wilderness. But oh the need of " ftanding still in the watch," the infirmities of our nature are fo many and great! Remember me and crave my preservation, that my life at least may be given me for a prey; and may you and I farewel, and increase in that life and love which change not, nor end.

1782—I received thy affectionate letter in due course: it was truly acceptable; and though thou wast far from being forgotten by me, it tended to revive that near sympathy with thy secret spiritual travail, which particularly accompanied my mind when near thee in person, and which I trust proceeded from the cementing influence of divine love, and gospel sellowship.

We meet with but few in this pilgrimage and state of probation, who are dipped in sympathy with us, and know what it is to be destitute of all comeliness. There are many who, were we clad in royal apparel, and had the King's fignet always unveiled upon us, would no doubt acknowledge us in the gate; and, in the victory of the heavenly cause, cry, Hosanna! with us in triumph. But what was the path of the Master? Was it not the path for his fervants, that they might be encouraged, and have a steadfast example therein? He trod it before them, and endured the feveral gradations and dispensations of the spiritual warfare; he sasted in the wilderness, until he was an hungred. Let us not then think it strange that the servant is not greater than his Master. Our safety depends upon our watchful attention, that when we are tempted we yield not; but oh! how near does the impatience of our dispositions border upon that language, " command there stones that they be made bread;" forgetting that it is not by bread alone that our hidden life is preserved, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God, and by every turning of his divine hand upon us; whereby, in his wisdom, we grow from stature to stature, which by taking thought for ourselves we cannot do. If we are found worthy to stand as pillars in the Lord's house, in this day when there are many heavy burdens to bear, we must be first upon a fure foundation, our dispositions, like those of the disciples that discovered the love of their Master's glory on the mount, must be subservient to divine control; and we must not only learn to descend from the vision of light, but to keep the charge. charge, and tell it to no man until the life of power arise. How hewing and forming are these things! and what instructive traces do they leave of the Master's work, because they reduce self, and convince that no considence must be placed therein! May it be our experience, dear friend, in the few succeeding steps of our lives, patiently to suffer, and servently to wrestle for the blessing of preservation.

1st month 1783—What has felt very defirable to me is, that in these outward separations, we may increase in that which is good, and that whatever befals us may tend to fettle us the more in the ground-work of true religion, that therein we may fland, and therein grow; then will the fluctuations of this uncertain state become fanctified to us, and being inftructed in the school of Christ, our spirits and conduct will become more conformable to the purity of the Pattern. My fear of myfelf daily increases, and I am also apt to think that by looking too much at any evil, we may infensibly be almost drawn into it. It is nevertheless good to survey our standings, to prove our own infirmities, and repair to the place of help. The multiplied distresses, both spiritual and temporal, that have been permitted to befal us in this land, or fince I left my own, have often occasioned a fecret cry for the continuance of divine prefervation; and a little ray of hope that the Lord hath not forfaken us, is all the fuccour that my poor toffed mind has often felt. There is great need in time of outward perplexity, impartially to examine the cause, to search what there is in us that requires these things; by so doing we may often see couched under them the wisdom of a divine Hand, and that to remove the cause in ourselves, is to go to the root of the matter.

1st month 1783—I feel now, as at many other times, my mind drawn into near affection, and, I trust I may say, that true fellowship with thee, which fprings when I am capable of experiencing any better enjoyment than what is natural; but as that only arises from the renewings of life, I am often afraid to speak of it, lest it should fall short of its character in the time of trial: however, I may fay I feel that love which many waters and feafons of deep and secret distress, have not quenched nor diminished. A degree of this mark of discipleship reviving in my mind, has fometimes been as a temporary cordial, tending to difpel the gloom of many discouragements, and opening the view to a little pure serene satisfaction. My dear friend, many are the trials of the enemy of our peace to overfet us, many have been the affaults which I have met with fince I faw thee, far exceeding what I ever knew before. If divine help will condescend to be near, and preserve me from sinking in the pit of discouragement, just keep my spirit alive to confide in his name, and dwell under his power, my heart, I trust, will bow in humble gratitude before him, and acknowledge his might. Our eye is now much fixed upon Yorkshire; oh! that we may there experience the evidence of divine acceptance, and that, in our movements, or not moving at all, the bleffing of prefervation may attend us. Outward enjoyments, domestick tranquillity, quillity, and the affectionate regard of our friends, are all in themselves desirable objects, but without this bleffing, what are they? insipid, or fruitless delights.

1st month 1783-As, (in infinite wisdom no doubt) our minds are at times drawn into folitude, fo as to refemble the Pelican in the wilderness, having no access to the habitable parts of the earth, nor fubject to human observation, so it appears confistent with godly jealoufy that human confolation should be forbidden, and that, having our dependance only on a gracious and merciful Father, who deals with us as children who require his chastising hand, his rod and his staff, we may procure to ourselves a safe foundation, with a quiet habitation thereon, out of the reach of human interruptions. Surely there are none fo tried asthe poor weak instruments, that are used for the divine will to be communicated through. These require not only the forming of the Potter's hand, but higher degrees of drying, and greater heat in the furnace to prepare them, than almost any other veffel; nay (if I may be allowed the comparison) they are like dishes that have to pass through the oven for every fervice, and which, after they are emptied, and the company has enjoyed them, need more washing and care than any other utenfil at the table; and great danger there is that, by indifcretion of some fort or other, they will get cracked or broken. I look with dread, I am bowed down and difmayed, at the fight of the precarious standing of fuch, but especially of my own: the consideration of human weakness, and " how frail I am," is almost my meat and drink. How excellent is the privilege of having a monitor at home, an impartial Friend in our bosom, who, if we enough attend to Him, is able to make us as wise even as our teachers! the reproofs and wounds of this Friend are better than the kisses of an enemy.

1st month 1783—I have now continued about two weeks longer in this place, and have received very affectionate kindness, and great hospitality from my friends. Were there not fomething in our minds that is panting after fuperior, more extensive, and fecret enjoyments, I have thought myself placed among the cordials of life: but without the feafoning virtue of truth, and an evidence (though ever fo fmall) of divine approbation marking, or refting upon, our dwelling place, they are tasteless and insipid enjoyments. Perhaps I have deprived myself of that which is good, and am now too ready to let others share the same; a disposition which I wish not to cultivate, it being highly inconfistent with the benevolence of the gospel, which breathes no language inferior to that of, "Glory to God in the highest, peace on earth, and good will towards men." But how to diftinguish, at times, the grand cause among a multiplicity of causes, requires wisdom, undefiled wisdom, that the immortal birth may be furrendered to the breast and care of its true mother, and that nothing hurt it, or diminish its strength; but that, under all turnings and overturnings, divisions and fubdivisions, it may gradually and steadily grow in stature, in wisdom and pure understanding, and take to itself an everlasting dominion in us. It is the "deep that calleth unto deep." I thought I felt, on reading thy last, something of the mind of truth in reviving a little my drooping spirits; a degree of thankfulness covered my mind, and I was encouraged to wait the passing away of this gloomy night, in comfortable hope of the dawning of a better day, wherein the former and the latter rain may descend, to add sap to the root, and to refresh the branches. What is it in us that flinches for much at fuffering? It must be that slesh and blood which can never inherit the kingdom. I have beflowed fome pains to filence it with reasoning, and arguing the nature of things; but alas! I have forrowfully found it fed thereby, and perceived that it is only in humbly abiding under the divine operations, that fubjection is wrought, and the most fo, when the cause was not fully discovered; for then the lowly petition afcends, which at this time covers my spirit, Grant me a grain of the precious gift of faith, that I may live and walk thereby.

Ist month 1783—O this root of felf, when will it be subjected! It perhaps appears more to oppose thy service, but I believe it more secretly prevails in me, and is not under that control and subordination which thou hast it in more minute things. But let us not weigh ourselves by one another; let us rather bring our spirits to the balance of the sanctuary, and if there we want chipping and hewing, not think hard of the instruments that are to do it; but passively and patiently endure all things, in hope to enjoy that little which is our own in the end, having it pure and separated from the vile. My mind has been drawn into great negatives.

nearness to you many times since we parted. I have feelingly remembered the feafons when, though befet with many fecret probations, we might fay, We took fweet counsel, and our spirits were baptized together, and prepared thereby to go up as to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob, where He has graciously condescended to teach us more and more of his ways, and begotten fresh resolutions in us to walk in His paths. Let us not faint, my beloved friends. but wrestle with Him for the renewal of this blesfing; that though it may be our lot often to be feparated, our spirits may unite together in holy fellowship, and that pure love which many waters cannot quench, nor all the changes of this uncertain state of being ever diminish.

6th month 1783-My mind is much with you, and I trust it is in that fellowship which can unite with the absent though in suffering, and breathe for the prosperity of the precious truth. I beg to be more and more bound to that, let its appearance among men be ever fo mean and contemptible; for it is here that we are not afraid of human wisdom and displeasure. But is there not, sometimes, too much fear of this fort, when under that power, and the burthen of that word which, if it met with no obstruction in the instrument, would oftener break the rocks, and be a confuming fire among the cedars of Lebanon? May this your feafon of fuffering be bleffed to you and the church! and oh! may your hands be strong in the faith, and hold out to the end in patience, that with the church coming out of the wilderness, you may repose on the breast of the Beloved of souls, and your cause centre with Him.

7th month 1783-My best wishes accompany thee, in this stepping out into the awful fervice of visiting the few scattered professors under our name, and perhaps of unfolding in the fresh openings of life, further manifestations of gospel light to such as are not yet of our fold, particularly in Scotland. I remember that before we entered the borders of that land, and indeed whenever I viewed it in profpect, it was clearly impressed upon my mind, that there was no track for us to go in, nor any footsteps to be depended upon in that journey; but that our attention would be continually required to the fresh pointings and qualifications for fervice: and on our leaving Scotland, we had greatly to lament a deviation from this pure indwelling of spirit, and unfaithfulness to some manifestations of duty. When the mind, after being engaged in fervice, has got a little liberty, and feels itfelf as a bow unftrung, it is too apt to rejoice, and evade the next bending for fervice; whereby half our commission may be neglected, when we are peculiarly called to watch, to try and to feel every step that we take. Here simplicity and humility are our companions, and if a pure holy zeal covers us, in a state of true dependance, the wisdom of the creature has no part; but the life rifing into dominion, and being taken for our guide in every step under the exercise of the gift, we have no need to be anxious for doctrinal arguments to prove what we affert to the people; because this life answering the life in those that hear, can expound and unfold fuch mysteries as have been

hid

hid from ages; and it is only by our fingle attention to the purity of the gift, and the milk of the word, that we can be preferved in that fimplicity which confounds the wifdom of the wife, brings to nought the understanding of the prudent, and exalts the feed of the kingdom. Thus I apprehend the ministers of the gospel are led, not only to teach all nations whither they are fent, but to baptize them into the power of the gospel, however few the number of their words may be. I feel a strong desire for your faithfulness in this journey, and that as you pass through little villages and towns, it may not be without feeling for service, for in this respect we were deficient. Look not too much at your own weakness, but consider the strength of that almighty Arm which works marvelloufly for those that rely upon it, and gives them faith for their victory. I know there is fomething in us, when we occasion many people to be called together, that fears for ourselves, and for the truth; it is well, in these times of trial, to confider our own inability, and in whom help and power dwells; for then a calm fometimes allays these anxieties, and spreads upon our minds the beauty and convincing influence of a lively, awful, filent worship, which stands in need of no addition, but which, at times, is accompanied with words in the demonstration and power of the fame spirit.

7th month 1783—I think I was scarcely ever sensible of more death and darkness than since I came here: if a little life and light should spring in our suture sittings, it may have some reviving effects, for really my spirits are in a drooping way, and my strength ftrength also. I expected nothing but suffering on coming here, and thus far it is my portion; this satisfaction, however, attends me, that it is but for a day or two, and I endeavour to lift up my head above sinking too much; but oh for the cause! the testimony of truth seems nearly laid waste, and the pure life crucified. Here are, indeed, many valiants, but what can they do? it is not the servants of themselves, that can make the dry bones live. The little strength I feel, seems to be in endeavouring after a settled retirement of mind out of meetings, and being willing to appear foolish as I am.

7th month 1783-There is a beautiful order in the growth of the spiritual, as well as natural man: he is at first carried and fondled, and it is then generally right to give him what he cries for; in a little time, he makes fome efforts to go by himfelf, which, fooner or later, mostly prove effectual. Prefuming now on his own ability, he affumes the air and carriage of a man, and in this confidence goes forward, until his stumblings, his falls, and his wounds, have fufficiently convinced him, that he is but a child, and that his will is no more to be depended upon than his strength. As it was right to indulge the simplicity of his first desires, so now, these becoming mixed with evil inftigations, either in the appearance of a friend or an enemy, it becomes neceffary, in order to preferve this simplicity, and the divine impressions which may renewedly descend upon it, industriously to repel and guard against the powerful influence of felf-love and felf-feeking, which is the beginning of our continual warfare. I at times thankfully view fome of the exercises of my mind, mind, as a probationary childhood, frequently occafioned by indifcretion, and increased by the growth of the corrupt will with a growing knowledge in divine things; fo that I have been and am frequently ready to conclude, I shall one day fall by the hand of this enemy: but oh! may we support the warfare which is mercifully begun! and by depending folely on that Arm, which cut Rahab, and wounded the Dragon, be no ways instrumental ourselves in preventing a maturity in the pure life, and preaching by good works. I hope my dear thou continuest, and will continue to feel thy habitation like the house of Obed-edom. It is indeed distant from us; but of how little consequence is that, when there is fellowship in the circulating life of truth, wherein we are as epiftles written in one anothers hearts, which are meditated in, at times, to the refreshment of our spirits when drooping and feeble.-It is a bleffing not to be lightly esteemed, to be married to those of lively spirits, and clean conduct; not drawing back, but helping forward, that work to which there is a divine calling: and as --- is among those who are thus blessed, it will, I have no doubt, fweeten many unpalatable cups, and render moderate some blasts from the wilderness of this world, and its corrupt fluctuating spirit.

1st month 1784—Oh the need there is, when we feel a fecret divine approbation for some little faithful services, as the answer of well done, carefully to centre this treasure, and leave it in the hands of our great benefactor! for how unfit are our earthly hearts to be entrusted with riches so weighty, and so different in their nature! they are indeed sound to be as bags with holes, which lose the precious gift among the rubbish of the house. Under these considerations, I am led at times to prefer poverty, and nakedness, and want, to an appearance of wealth, and spending my spiritual substance in riotous living: and to be preserved chaste and faithful in this state, is one of my strongest desires, yet attended, in some degree, with the certain knowledge of how frail I am.

1st month 1784—We have great need, in this day, for clean-handed, fingle-eyed instruments, in the work of reformation; fuch as demonstrate, in the particular parts, and general tenour of their conduct, that they truly fear God, and hate covetoufness: for, of such only is the pure spiritual building composed; the church, against which, Satan and his agents can never prevail; whereto the nations may gather, behold its purity, and be invited to become living members thereof. But, oh how defiled is our camp! how temporizing are the spirits of those who ought to stand, as valiant foldiers, against spiritual wickedness in high places, and fight manfully under the banner of the Lamb! The world, with its gilded baits, has allured their attention, and attracted their fight, from the example of our holy pattern; it is therefore no wonder, if the work they undertake is fuperficially done; and that which has been their fnare, passes unobserved for want of purification. From a view of these things, I have been led to prefer, and even to request tribulation, mortification, and what may be called evil things, in this life, to an unsubjected mind, being an unsound member member in the church, and feeking to be heir of two kingdoms. Whether I am thus preferved or not, I believe that now, as formerly, the lame, the blind, and the dwarfs, will not be accepted to minister of the most holy things, and carry forward the cause of righteousness in the earth, until their application is uprightly, and humbly made to Him, who is the healer of all diseases, and the restorer of ancient paths to walk in.

2d month 1784-Thou hast often been in my remembrance fince we parted, and both when hoping and doubting, I have wished to address thee in this way, believing it warrantable now, as in the captivity of the Jews, for those who are uprightly, though feebly, concerned for the profperity of truth, to speak often one to another; and the trufting that a book of remembrance is written, cafts, in some depressing seasons, something of a ray of spiritual funshine upon the spirits in prison; which, though not a promise of freedom, yet cheers a little, and renders tolerable our unavoidable fituation of mind. A multiplicity of concurring circumstances, past and in prospect, have of late deeply affected me: the spirit of Goliath rages from every quarter: its power I feel, the low state of the church is evident, and my own weakness stares me in the face. I would be glad to dwell in obscurity, and have my name blotted out of remembrance. There are many called foldiers among us, but oh! how few of fuch as are loyal to the King of kings, and whose work is diligently to establish his government; infomuch that fuch children as I am are ready to conclude, that if we move at all, our hand must be against every one, and every ones hand against us: for though retirement is what above all things I would choose for myself, yet if I apprehend myself called to service at all, it is the servent prayer of my spirit to be preserved therein from the sear of any man, and from doing the work deceitfully: nevertheles, the secret seelings of my mind seem to say unto the seed, that "bonds await you." May we then possess our souls in patience, and not sear in seasons appointed to contend for our faith!

2d month 1784-Being affected with the general causes of discouragement, and so much afflicted with fome particulars, I am ready at times to conclude, I cannot hold fast my faith without wavering in this time of trial. You, my beloved friends, have your share of exercise; and whatever others do, be you faithful unto death, spiritually and naturally, and then will your fervices be crowned with that life which cannot be gainfayed. We have much difloyalty among us to the King of kings, and some who are his subjects want to take from him an improper share of rule. Seeing these things, let us be lowly, and shelter ourselves under the fpirit of the Lamb, that the prevalence of this alone may be the weapons of our warfare: though we experience him to be flain as from the foundations of the world, and have to go down into fuffering with him, and our faith deeply tried, yet let us remember that He lives and reigns for ever, and that, notwithstanding the combined powers of darkness, of the increase of His government there shall not be an end.

Our passage through life is like a journey wherein are difficulties and snares; and wherein we find many who say they are going to the same port, and who think they have sound out, from longer experience and superior wisdom, a better and somewhat different road; but when we believe them, and make a little trial of their path, how have we, with painful steppings, to return to our tribulated pilgrimage? I feel deeply engaged in my spirit, that I may, and that we all may, look to our own standings not even to the most approved instruments for instruction, when our application ought to be to the Spirit and example of our Holy Head and High Priest.

1st month 1785—Though outward separation, and other circumstances inherent to our peculiar stations, may sometimes blunt the continual keenness of natural affection; yet the pure cement of true religious union being more durable in its nature, and of a more preserving quality, it can never be diminished, as our spirits become more and more influenced thereby, and we so transformed by the renewings of the mind, as not only to prove what is the divine will concerning us, but to yield obedience to all its requirings. Under this holy and spiritual canopy is preservation and peace; and while the carnal mind, and the wisdom thereof is perplexed, and exposed to almost continual fluctuation and disturbance, they that are gathered here (not from speculation, or the line of another's experience) but from a living and heart-felt sense of the certainty of divine truth, can acknowledge, "we have a strong city and that salvation is appointed for walls and bulwarks." Oh! that we may more and more know our dwellings to be within this holy enclosure; for the incorruptible inheritance is no where else to be found, than in knowing the divine will, and doing it.

7th month 1785—There is a love which I trust is ours, independent of visible figns, and diftinguished by that freedom which the truth gives, whether it be in speaking or in being filent. The substance of true friendship is hidden; and it is not of a corruptible nature, if we keep it in its right foil. Though its branches are often cut down by the good Hufbandman, yet the stump is fastened, like that we read of, with a band of iron and brass in the tender grafs of the field; and when we renewedly experience that the Most High reigneth, it puts forth again, and excellent dignity is added unto it. I feel as I write an affectionate nearness to you, and oh! may we all so dwell under the dew of heaven, and the times and difpenfations appointed to pass over us, as that the joy of the Lord may fully become our firength!

8th month 1785—Perhaps this may find thee in fome desolate place, where my spirit salutes thee in the renewed feeling of fympathetic affection, and comfortable hope that, through the multiplied trials of thy day, and of the prefent journey, thou wilt be fecretly supported with the arm of Omnipotence, and refrethed after many weary steps, with the streams of divine consolation; so that thou wilt still be able to do all things, through Him that strengtheneth thee.

My mind is much with thee and thy valuable companions, and fometimes I think I feel a fellowship in fome of your fufferings, not doubting but a measure of them is mingled in the cup of your present service: and why should it not be so, when we consider the tribulated path of the great Master, and that it is enough for the servant to be as his Master, and the disciple as his Lord. The wise purposes of the great Potter are not always feen; there are many things in the process of forming the clay, or a people to His praise, the necessity whereof is not always manifest to those that stand by; and I have thought that in the line you are, have been, or may be led in, some among you may find openings to services, which not being found in the pages of past experience, may occasion doubts and difmay, and perhaps a profitable query, hath the Lord done this? yet it is also profitable to remember, that it is not for the instrument to fay to him that useth it, " what doest thou?" I do not wonder at your feelings in being fo feparated in perfon from the vifible church. I remember, though in a less degree, fimilar impressions which have never left me; and indeed my mind is comforted in finding an increasing attachment to, and value for the precious fellowship of the brotherhood, though it is not always found in an entire fimilarity of prospects, and of ways and means of profecuting good, fo much as in an uniform, upright concern for the prosperity of the cause, which under the shadow of heavenly instruction, is one of the best cements that fellow travellers can experience. We should be glad, in our passing along, to find more of it; and were this united engagement to appear in an honest search into the real state of individuals, of families, and of meetings, some of Jericho's walls might fall in the contest, and people's attention get turned to defolated Jerufalem. But it is a land of mifts and fogs, yea, in some places, of clouds and of thick darkness: may that over-ruling power which has its ways in the deeps, difpel thefe temporary things, and usher in a greater display of pure light, that they who are engaged to work, and are appointed for it, may work in the light, and fully approve themselves children thereof.

11th month 1785—I feel for —, and wish her an increase of faith, or a more free exercise of that which she has, that so, it may fully be accompanied with fuch works as the great Father of the family has affigned her; perhaps both fhe and I would fare better, did we look more inward and less outward in our reflections upon ourselves, and for every future supply of wisdom and strength. It is furely a wonderful attainment to live by faith; it is deep beyond human penetration, and feems to comprehend all that is needful for a follower of Christ to experience: but the trial of it remains to be more precious than that of gold, and preferable to the best of our faculties that we can substitute for it. Poor ----, she has often felt near to my life. It is the poor that can most feelingly falute the poor, and dip with them in their afflictions; go with them to the house of mourning; and, when the holy anointing is poured forth, rejoice together in hope.

1st month 1786—I hope that county is by this time profitably visited, or rather the seed therein, a place where I once thought it was the hardest to find (however in myself) of any I was ever in. But places and persons alter; and where death most reigned, perhaps life may now most eminently abound; and life is never more acceptable than when it fucceeds a total death, nor light, than when it fprings out of the greatest obscurity. To dwell with that which teaches to die daily, and to be preserved from the sleep of carnal death, is an attainment I sometimes covet; but flesh and blood had rather be fustained with a little of vesterday's manna, and retain a former evidence of life, than undergo, from day to day, in religious fervices, the conflicting exercise of being buried in baptism, though it is bleffed with the refurrection of divine virtue and power: and the reason I apprehend is, because no flesh can glory herein; it therefore oppofes this work, and the refifting of this opposition with the little strength we have, truly occasions a continual warfare to the christian traveller.-The prefent is a scene of conflict and probation; but when we are strengthened to look over it, to that glorious habitation, whose walls are falvation, whose gates are praise, and whose inhabitants no more fay they are fick; there is fomething fo animating in the prospect, that we are willing to endure all things to attain it. Let us then take courage in hope, and faithfully endeavour to do our present best.

4th month 1786—We have often conversed about friends in Ireland, and felt the glow of true love therein; which, though not much expressed to themselves, is yet a living spark in all our breafts, which many waters cannot quench; nor will long feparation be able to erafe those epiftles which are written by the finger thereof, and in which there is a liberty fometimes allowed for the spirit to meditate, with a degree of strengthening confolation, especially when, by the clearness of the characters, we find one another as fellow pilgrims, travelling after the refurrection of pure life, and making steady advances towards that city which hath foundations. Upon this object I fometimes fix my eye, with renewed refolutions, through holy help, to press forward through the difficulties of the present scene, and to count all things but as drofs and dung that I may win Christ, and be found in him; not having on my own righteousness, but the righteousness of faith in Christ, that thereby I may attain the refurrection of His power, the fellowthip of His fufferings, and be made conformable to His death. The spirit is willing thus to endure, but the flesh and its inherent propensity to ease, creates a warfare, wherein I fometimes fear, the natural and best life will entirely fall.

5th month 1786—We are fometimes like pilgrims whose faith and patience are at a low ebb; and were it not for the gracious condescension of Him who regardeth even the sparrows, and whose arm of everlasting strength is underneath in seasons of drooping and dismay, we should be ready at times to faint; but it is the renewings of holy help that become strength in weakness to those that put their trust in it; and is a present sufficiency when we are not able to provide for ourselves. May thou be fully grounded in this truft, that thereby, in times of discouragement and sifting, thy stability may endure, and thy experience increase in the knowledge that all things work together for good, to those that truly love the appearances or manifestations of the divine will. I believe thou knowest that I dearly love thee, and, I may add, have felt fweet unity with thy spirit; and therefore hope ever freely to pour into thy mind any little hints which may in that love revive towards thee. And now, as thou haft put thy hand to a good work, let me fay, look not back; and when the certainty of thy being rightly anointed for it is withdrawn, which is no uncommon trial, look not then to the fentiments of others for support and encouragement; but labour after true quietude and patience of foul, whereby thou mayest, with comfortable assurance, in the right time, have thy head raifed in hope, and thy growth in religious experiences be less superficial, than I fear is often the case even with those who have been put forth by the heavenly shepherd. There is no confolation, no confidence, wifdom, or strength, like that which proceeds from the deep and hidden fpring, whereunto we must learn to dig, if ever we are rightly grounded in the work of fanctification: and as the divine will is our fanctification, if we obey it; be not flack in furrendering thyself thereto. I write not these things from an apprehension that thou needs them more than others, for my fentiments of thee are very different; but I wish thee to set out independent of any instrumental help, except that which is fent from the fountain of purity; and to look to no example further than it is confiftent with the holy pattern.

7th month 1786-I remember it is faid, that even "when the fons of God met together, Satan came also among them;" fo that if he did so again, it was no new thing; and we are inftructed by the angel how to deal even with him; not to bring a railing accufation, but patiently, and with christian fortitude, to commit the great cause to that power which can protect it, and rebuke the adverfary, but not in our way, and in our time; for it is in general most eminently displayed when the creature is reduced, and nothing left in us that can boaftingly exult even over Satan himfelf. To behave ourfelves wifely in the church, humbly and watchfully to fear meddling with things too high for us, things into which our minds are not renewedly baptized, is a care which I wish we may ever preserve; for herein a godly jealoufy over ourselves and our own spirits, will help to centre us in that meekness for which the paths of true judgment are appointed, will give a right feeling of what is opposition to the truth, and what is not, and how to use the armour of light; which, when rightly put on in meetings for discipline, unfolds the simplicity of truth, and discovers the pure difinterested foundation of those who are engaged to contend for the It is becoming the nobility of the cause of righteoufness, to see its warriors so unfeeling of personal opposition, as to return good for evil, and patiently to endure all things, feeking an opportunity to blefs, by candidly opening each others understandings, and then generously forgiving. There is no doubt, but that, in our fociety, if the root and ground of christian discipline in ourselves were attained to, and abode with, meetings for the promulgation of it in the general, would be more owned by their members being baptized by one spirit into one body, and more crowned with that life which is peculiarly in referve for those, who have been faithful to the death of the cross in themfelves. I am often humblingly convinced, that whatever I do in the facred offices of the church, if it be the fruit of speculation, a lively imagination, or only a defire to render myself useful, however fuitable it may feem, yet not proceeding from fome little influence of the holy anointing, which lets me fee myfelf with others, it is fure to leave a painful corroding fense upon my own mind, which I am afraid I have fometimes charged others withbeing the cause of rather than myself. Thus danger appears on every hand, except we are watchful and humble; but "the humble the Lord teacheth of his ways, and the meek he guides in the paths of judgment: " thy gentleness (faid David) hath made me great."

8th month 1786—I fee abundant occasion to watch the fpring in myself from whence my rejoicings and depressions come. Self is a subtil enemy, infinuating itself into the company of the purest intentions, and approved services, claiming a share of their peace, and of the spoil of the most righteous victories over every enemy but itself. A furnace, however, is wisely prepared for gold, where this dross discovers itself by separation; so that if we are zealous enough to get rid of it, we must frequently retire to the test, submit to whatever degree of purification the great Refiner fees meet, and cheerfully endure hardness under His gracious protecting power; for, according to my experience, I take this redemption of the pure life from all felf-feekings, to require the closest combat, and most intrepid perseverance of a christian, in order to gain access to that river which makes glad the city of God, and to inherit the promifes of the gospel in their own purity; where the edge of many forrows and trials is blunted, when they have nothing to strike at but holy humility. O it is a bleffed experience which my foul fervently craves! I fometimes think I gain a little ground towards it, when a discovery of its animating glory, substantial feeding, and impregnable defence, is made to my understanding; but, on finding how little capacity I have to receive things genuinely divine, the acknowledgment is readily made, that I know nothing as I ought to know, which is only attained by an experimental growth and establishment therein; and yet short of this I sometimes desire to find no reft.

10th month 1786—Experience teaches us, that it is not always we are capable of even enjoying that good and profitable communion which, by virtue of the key of David, is fometimes opened for our prefent refreshment and encouragement, in our path of deep proving and frequent dismay; much less of so resting in it, as always to be ready for the expression of those things which are not at our command. I conclude thou knowest that——has been sometime in a low depressed situation of mind, but her company had a savour in it, of which she herself was not fensible, as is generally the case with those who are under the most unmixed dispensations of purifying virtue. That state wherein all fense of comeliness is taken away, and under which we are clothed, as the prophet Daniel thought himself, with corruption, is that which appears to me the most acceptable, and no doubt is the best prepared to receive the language of, " arise, thou art greatly beloved of the Lord;" the chastening of these having been seen, and their many mournings heard, by the gracious ear of the Lord of Sabaoth. How different would things be among us as a people, if all those who wish to be confidered as under the divine forming hand, and who are ready to step into service, were but enough. emptied, and their beauty stained in their own eyes! many spacious buildings on a fandy foundation would then be thrown down, and there would be more exercise and care in search of the immovable Rock of ages, which really in many places. feems grievously neglected. My prospects are often mournful when I look at myfelf, there weaknefs and inexperience in some necessary refinements are forrowfully manifest; and on taking a view of the state of the visible church, we see many of its members fo difeafed that they cannot perform their allotted functions, nor edify the body, though they retain their places there: the redeemed fanctified church how fmall! and in what a wilderness state! So that to look at ourselves, at the degenerate, or at the preferved church, ministers discouragement, and shews us the necessity of turning our attention another way; inward, instead of outward, and there waiting for the renewings of that power by which the worlds were made, and receiving supplies for. spiritual wants at the first almighty Hand.

1st month 1787—Your joint affectionate falutation came duly to my hands, and with the fympathy expressed in it, afforded me a little of that consolation which the drooping mind fometimes longs to partake of, when meditating on its own weakness and unworthiness of the renewed proofs of friendly regard and christian fellowship. It is pleasant indeed for brethren to dwell together in unity; and O that in order to retain this mark of discipleship, our eye may be fingle! for this leads to a communion still more excellent and pure, than that which we enjoy with each other in this mixed state of things, even a communion with the light which discovers all things, and is the life of those that believe in it. Yes I do know your path, and that it is a tribulated one: may you run your race therein with patience; for "tribulation worketh patience, patience experience, and experience hope, and hope maketh not ashamed, because the love of God, (and not of ourselves) is shed abroad in our hearts." Here is a foundation, which the gates of hell cannot prevail against, and which, as we keep to it, will preferve us from being foon shaken in mind, or troubled with those changeable things which in the course of our pilgrimage may befal us, I hope you will continue to keep in your remembrance a poor little fifter, befet with many discouragements, and fifted with many fears and doubtings, particularly respecting our future movements; for I endeavour what I can to leave the things that are behind.

4th month 1787—Your company was pleafant to us, and the remembrance of you is fo, and I trust will continue as long as the fincere engagement of our minds is to be branches in the same Vine.

Though,

Though, feparately and unitedly, we may experience the chilling blafts of winter, and feel the dryness and strippedness peculiar to that season; yet learning in the school of Christ, in every state to be content, and perceiving with increasing clearness, where the sap remains, we can rejoice therein, and salute each other in true poverty of spirit.

4th month 1787-I received a kind encouraging letter from thee fome months ago, when, with many others, I was about the remains of our dear friend—. We had been paying, for a few days before, the last office of friendship to him, and were witnesses to the awful conflicts of his spirit, in struggling, after many years disobedience to the openings of truth, for that eternal peace for which his foul was poured forth like water, and his bones feemed out of joint; but divine compassion was near, through the efficacy of renewed visitation, to gather into the heavenly garner. The feafon was altogether fo deeply affecting to my mind, which was low and depressed when I went, and I got so involved in the gloomy paffages of death through which he had passed, that it seemed as if many circumstances attending my continuance in mutability, were lost in the prospect of that solemn period wherein mortality must be put off. But on reading that part of thy letter wherein thou favest, that in thy late illness, thy hope was abundantly confirmed in the invisible power of an endless life, I was favoured with a little glimpse of the faints inheritance, which, at times, has revived ever fince, as a cordial to my mind; for in the course of divine wisdom, the hand of affliction, and deep spiritual probation, has lain steadily upon me for many months. Thou wouldft wouldst hear of an illness I had at Sheffield, which occasioned my dear husband's hasty return. My dwelling, for some time, seemed to be at the gates of death both spiritually and naturally; being in that state wherein I could say with the spouse, that "I sought him whom my soul loveth, yea I sought him upon my bed, and sound him not," yet this invisible Arm being underneath, was graciously revealed in an acceptable time, when, through sore tribulation, a resigned frame of mind became more my experience.

5th month 1787—If the right thing does but prevail in the approaching folemnity, it may be a time of healing. Those whose spiritual faculties are alive in the truth, can hardly fail of beginning to feel an exercise on that account; and no doubt it is necessary that it should be so, in order to prepare and reduce the minds of friends to a state of child-like fimplicity, and that abasedness of felf, which endureth all things, hath nothing to lofe, and therefore, with christian firmness, rejoiceth in that tribulation, by which the pure lowly feed of the kingdom triumphs in overcoming evil by that which is good. Thou and others have had to drink many bitter cups in that place; and it may, be that, through patient perseverance in well-doing, in fecret fuffering with the feed, maintaining the faith in that power through which miracles are ftill wrought, the day is approaching, wherein that life which is the light of men, may become more conspicuously the crown and diadem of our assemblies, and of the services performed in the church.

5th month 1787—I received thy letter, and was pleafed to hear from thee, though the account of thy health, &c. was not so favourable as might be wished; but I hope that after thou got set off from home, and became refigned to what had fometime appeared right, thou would revive both in body and mind. I have frequently known it to be the cafe with myfelf, having been often worst just before fetting out, when the mind was depressed with the weight of future engagemnts, and loaded with the fense of its own exceeding great weakness, and inability to do any good; and at the fame time, having the comfortable enjoyment of divine help veiled until the needful feafon. This experience was never more confirmed to me than in the present journey, nor the sufficiency of that arm, which remains to be mighty to fave, is strength in our weakness, and a present helper in the needful time. If we are but favoured in our future steppings, to increase in this experience, our trials which are in the way to it will not be too heavy, in comparison of that pure confolation which they produce: and as we are endeavouring (all of us I hope) to move forward in a line of fimplicity and faithfulness to what we apprehend is right, do not let us add to our difficulties, by admitting carnal reasonings, and taking too much thought for to-morrow; but rather labour after that great attainment of living one day at once.

6th month 1787—You will fee by the foregoing, that we are arrived at the intended place of our abode, and have ventured to ask at last for a recommendation from our friends of the monthly meeting. I trust it is with dissidence, and the humbling sense that we are liable to err, that we take this step; and yet, as it appears in the way to peace, it is no doubt fafest to take it, and also most confistent with good order. We wish not to get from under that disposition which, in the feeling of creaturely weakness, "feareth always," lest the fubtil, transforming enemy should beguile us, induce to eat of that which is not good, and beget a confidence in our own strength and sufficiency to preferve ourselves. A self-righteous spirit is greatly to be dreaded; and though a state of doubting and discouragement is attended with many more forrows, yet if the faith remains unshaken, it is at times refreshed with that precious dew, and the fpringing up of that well of life, which make amends for all, fecretly replenish the drooping, yet waiting mind, and encourage it to press forward in the way which the vulture's eye hath not feen, nor any natural fierceness ever trod therein. Well! I trust so much we may fay, that our minds, fince leaving England, have been bowed in contrition before him who fees in fecret, and fettled, fometimes, in a quiet dependance upon his almighty Arm, rather defiring to be fustained in obscurity, than to be accounted any thing among men.

8th month 1787—Your joint falutation was truly acceptable; for though our love was not leffened, yet the fensible feeling of it, on reading your letter, was comforting to us, and strengthened the desire, that neither heights nor depths, things present nor things to come, may ever be able to separate us, either from the love of the great Shepherd, or from any of his faithful flock; of which number, may we, beloved friends, approve ourselves in all humility and godly care, enduring hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ, and not in our wills entangling ourselves ourselves with the affairs of this life; but seeking above all things to pleafe Him who hath mercifully called us into the spiritual warfare. Ah poorindeed! any thing that denotes the entrance of the wolf, feems to touch my tenderest feelings; because that little part of the great Shepherd's flock has been peculiarly visited, and their welfare the object of my frequent and fervent folicitude. Oh what need there is of watchfulness! truly the wolf cometh to tear and destroy, though, in order to deceive, he may put on the sheep's clothing: so that nothing but the true light can discover the hidden things of his dishonesty.--- I have had cause to say, since leaving my native country, that the divine hand is full of bleffings, and that our real comforts depend not fo much upon outward circumstances, as on that holy attractive influence, which at times graciously opens a passage for the humbled mind, out of the cumbers and discouragements of the present time, into a state resembling the green pastures of life, and enables to lie down in quiet refignation as beside the still waters; leaving future events, when we have done our best, to that power which can turn the wilderness into a fruitful field, and cause the fruitful field to be counted for a forest. When this good is mercifully near, and we are favoured with the common comforts of life, there ought to be a grateful acknowledgment thereof, as well as obedient returns.

8th month 1787—Thy brotherly falutation confirmed a hope I had entertained, that there lived in both our minds such 2 degree of true love, that whether we thus conversed together, or not, we should nevertheless nevertheless be favoured to feel one another in our respective lots, and experience the truth of that faving, "deep uttereth unto deep." My dwelling, in general, has feemed fo much in twilight, that meditation fuited me better than action, and the increase of my acquaintance with the everlasting Friend, whose name is Wonderful, and whose works are inconceivably fo to the natural mind, has feemed an enjoyment of the very effence of all friendship. In feafons of awful retirement, fince I came this time to this land, my spirit has faluted the few fathers, the brethren and fifters, yea, and the instructors too, whose counsel is the counsel of truth, and whose joy is in its prosperity: and O! that my steppings among you, may be fuch as to bring no dishonour, nor be the occasion of stumbling to any! I wish to be the companion of such as faithfully and fecretly labour for the increasing prevalence of gospel power; that so, through its purifying and fanctifying operations, every work may be wrought, and become an object of the bleffing which makes truly rich. Tribulations are undoubtedly the lot of all, who are feeking to follow their Lord and Master in the Regeneration; but He who knows what they stand in need of, in His own due and appointed time, reveals to them His confolations, if they are willing to dive deep enough for them; for thou knowest it is in the deeps that wonders are feen, and pearls procured. If I knew how to put into words, the variety of my fentiments and feelings fince coming to Clonmel, the freedom I feel with thee rather urges me to it; but fomeway or other, they feem enveloped in an undefigned fecrecy, and whenever I attempt to unfold, there is a fudden

a fudden restraint, like the turning of a double lock, and a wife and gracious intimation, to keep in my tent. The Lord is the tent of Jacob. How desirable is it then to be of the wrestling seed, the Jews inward, "of the circumcision that worship God in spirit, rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no considence in the sless?" for these, knowing in whom they have believed, have the resuge of the righteous to slee to; and being thus exercised and savoured, no matter how little and simple such appear, how much they feel their own weakness, nor how prostrate they lie at the feet of their Master, where, with reverent attention His gracious words are heard and received.

I have often feared that, for want of faith enough herein, and a patient waiting in the abasement of felf, for the renewed revelation of the divine will, the carrying forward of the Lord's work, both in individuals, in the visible church, and in the earth in general, should be retarded; and those designed to be the instruments thereof should forbear to follow the Lamb through suffering, and to fight under His banner, should lose that hope which maketh not ashamed (because the love of God is shed abroad in the heart) and cast away their shield, as though it had not been anointed. Well! may we profit by these considerations; and looking forward beyond the things that are feen which are temporal, to the things that are not feen which are eternal, hold fast our faith, and the profession of it without wavering, seeing that he is faithful who hath mercifully called us.

I observe thy confignment of a few lovely plants to my care; but hoping and believing that they are divinely divinely cared for, and are already taught where to feek their own bread, I feel particularly cautious of being the means of drawing their attention to any fource of comfort or instruction, inferior to that which has been opened in the fecret of their own fouls. I wish them to be more and more acquainted with, and fingly to rejoice in, the voice of their beloved; and I know this is all thou covets for them. But we must both allow, that visited minds are fometimes in danger of feizing and resting in fecondary confolations, by placing an undue dependance upon the instrument of their good, and being thus prevented from getting down to those nether springs, where, with pure and humble rejoicing, the spirit draweth water, and no flesh glories. I do not mean that these dear girls are in any danger of being too much attached to me: because they have neither occasion to be so, nor are fo unwife; but though I love them, and have apprehended myfelf constrained to demonstrate it, yet my own state generally feels an object of the compassion and sympathy of the feeblest traveller Zion-wards; and this consciousness makes me keep much at home, and mostly in my chamber, where the fweet fociety of my beloved Robert Grubb, and our truly valuable ----, fends back, now and then, a rifing figh, and urges me to number my bleffings; fetting before me the comfortable experience of the Apostle, which I am zealously pressing after, that of learning " in all states to be content." We have been favoured with many epistolary visits from our friends in England, which are not unlike little brooks by the way; but ah, we may fit by them until they dry up! however, comforts they are in their proper places.

oth month 1787—Every bleffing is at the dispofal of unerring wisdom; and our true enjoyments are generally proportioned to the refignation our minds attain, to furrender whatever we possess to the turnings of the divine hand; counting nothing truly good but what is purified by it. This is a state which sweetens the bitterest cups; and sees beyond the transient gratifications of a worldly fuperficial fpirit; and is only arrived at by a fingle attention to, and humble waiting and dependance upon, the fecret monitions of the spirit of truth. -Pleafant prospects, or enjoyments of any kind, are often much veiled from my view, or shaded with a gloom, which the fallacy of human judgment, and the futility of all natural gratifications, cast upon the most lively and lawful ideas: having, therefore, fixed our eye upon one glorious object, O may it be preferved fingle to the end of the race! that our running being with patience, and the steps we take attended with light at the finishing of the work affigned us, we may then be indifputably convinced, that having had no continuing city here, we have found one which hath foundations.

oth month 1787—As the present scene is, confistent with the nature of things, chequered with a variety of circumstances and scelings, we must endeavour after that fortification of spirit, which so endures all things as to prosit by them, and render ourselves objects of the care of the great Shepherd. Just to arrive at an attainment of this kind, is nearly all our drooping minds are led to desire, without any extraordinary exertions for enjoyments out of the line of divine appointment. I seem, at times, more and more encompassed with doubts and fears; faith is often deeply tried, and fuch depressions for a little while come over me, that conscious of having ventured, at the call, to walk as on the fea, and the fupporting evidence withdrawn, my fecret cry re-fembles poor Peter's when he faid, "fave Lord or I perish." Nothing short of divine compassion, and the renewed extension of holy help, can strengthen us to press forward with acceptance through the few fucceeding probations of our day, and open in us that eye of faith which, looking beyond them all, brightens at the glory that shall be revealed unto those, whose garments have been washed and made white by the spirit and power of the Lamb. There is fomething in us fo prone to fettle down at eafe in prosperity, that without some fatherly chastisements, we might forget from whom we receive our spiritual and temporal bleffings.

10th month 1787—My mind, on returning and fince, was favoured with a fecret humble trust that I was not out of the way of my duty, in accompanying to Enniscorthy and Carlow, nor in leaving you at the latter place; though my ftay afterwards in Waterford was not unaccompanied with that mortification, wherein no flesh can glory, and which was, no doubt, in mercy dispensed to us, to keep the poor vessel in such a degree of fanctification and honour, as to be at all fit for use in the spiritual family. I conclude that I need more of this kind of difpenfations than others, because I think more of them falls to my lot, which proves there is more to mortify. But though I often imagine myself ready to faint, yet my fervent prayer is that I may not utterly; but rather be ftrengthened to endure the cross, and despise the shame of creaturely abasement, looking to the Author of all true faith, for fuch renewed supplies as to steer safely through this uncertain state of being, and for ability, in the due and appointed time, to finish the wisely allotted portion of work, in reverent dependance that that which is right, and abundantly more than we deferve, will be mercifully recompensed. In the fervice wherein thou art now engaged, I trust help will not fail of being afforded in the needful time, fo as to give you all abundant cause humbly to acknowledge, in the winding up of your vifit, that ye have lacked nothing. Perhaps the line of your proceeding, as to passing from place to place, is right; but some way my mind follows you with a fort of regret, that more time was not allowed to have vifited, if truth had opened the way, the families of friends in the station of ministers and elders. There is much truth in a common faying, that the work which is well done, is twice done; and though this may be found the more mortifying and arduous part of the fervice, yet the neceffity and propriety of it being great, the peace refulting from faithful labour therein, would no doubt have been proportioned. But this feems like an unfeafonable hint, and I do not know any use there may be in dropping it, except by way of preface to an observation I was about to make, that friends upon religious visits often appear to be cramped in their passing along, from a fort of human prudence which dictates their making a long string of appointments, perhaps exceeding what is perceived by the eye of faith: thus they may be prevented from approving themselves those simple, humble followers of the great Master, which in the sincerity of their own hearts they have earneftly defired to be. Whether this proceeds from the want of faith in individuals, or the undifcerned influence of general cuftom, I know not, but certainly it is a fafe and hidden path which the christian traveller walks in, when, in no respect, he defires to take the lead, but resignedly gives himself up to be led, step by step, through the difficulties of his allotted line of service.

11th month 1787—I received this morning, with comfort, the long retained token of thy affection; and can affure thee I am poor enough to enter with heart-felt fympathy, into the fituation thou describes, possessing nothing whereon to build hopes of divine acceptance, unless renewed by the creative word of Omnipotence, and replenished with ftrength to hold on my way. Let us not then cast away our confidence, nor conclude ourfelves unprofitably tried, when we fee ourselves as . we are; but rather rejoice in this tribulation, and temptation to call in question all that felfish propriety, which human nature would fubtilly fuggest to us as wrought by the heavenly Hand. Count it all joy that thou art fo clothed with a fecret fenfe of corruption, and art fensible of thy own incapacity to do any good thing; and rather defire to live long under these humbling impressions, than to be taken away from all opportunity of magnifying that " grace, by which thou art what thou art," poor as thou thinkest thyself. Should we be foolish enough to think we know any thing, the voice of Wifdom would foon inform us, that we know nothing as we ought to know: in patience then poffefs thy foul, and keep in view an increasing refignation nation to every fecret pointing to duty. We are very apt anxiously to look for that good in our own way, and in our own time, which is only to be obtained by doing the divine will, after we have known it: forgetting that they who err herein, are beaten with many stripes: if this is not now thy state, the hint will do thee no harm. He who knows what is best for us, wisely makes us weary of ourselves and all visible objects, in order to beget that hunger and thirst after righteousness, to which the bleffings and promife belong: and fo to attach us, in facred union with himfelf, and love to His cause, as that in these days of lukewarmness in holy zeal, when the pure feed, through defertion, breathes the powerful query, "whom shall we fend, and who will go for us?" we may, in fingleness of heart, and living faith in divine sufficiency, answer, " here am I, fend me," Though this feems an intercourse superior to what we often think is ever allowed us, yet the gentle movings of the spiritual life, and the fubjected disposition of our minds thereto, in my apprehension, strongly resembles it; and if many vifited young people in this land, as well as my own, had placed their dependance upon the fanctifying operation of that facred fire, which quickens the mind and prepares the facrifice, rather than confulted vainly with flesh and blood, they would have been stronger in the faith, and more of them righteous contenders for it.

11th month 1787—It is by a fingle dependance upon that divine and creative power, by which all things were made that are made, that we find hard things made easy, and the mixture of human events so fanctified, as to be rendered falutary portions;

the immortal part in us is strengthened to ascend, as with wings of faith and love, that mountain spoken of by the prophet, where " nothing can hurt or destroy." A true gospel spirit so strongly resembles this defirable habitation, that when, in some degree of its own purity, it breaks in upon our impoverished minds, we are renewedly convinced that flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto us; but humbly fubmitting to its operations and directions, felf becomes of no reputation, "and the Lord alone is exalted in that day." I feel, as I am writing, a fecret breathing for thy brother's and thy prefervation, and encouragement to purfue invariably the one thing needful, because it is sealed, that that shall never be taken away. The purity and permanency of heavenly treasure, are objects of no small magnitude to the enlightened mind, which has feen the fluctuation of visible enjoyments, and the vanity of all its efforts, without divine affistance, to obtain the smallest particle of true spiritual bread, or one drop of that confolation which is only derived from the pure gift, or well in us fpringing up into life everlasting. But it is not enough to be enlightened; we must also wait, in the abasement of felf, for the thing spoken of and defired; and be willing to accept the Apostle's exhortation, not to be conformed to this world, but transformed by the renewing of our minds, fo as to prove what is the good and perfect and acceptable will, and then to do it, even at the loss of human approbation, and all the riches of the unregenerate will and wisdom of the creature. Here we learn the mystery of buying the truth, and felling all that we have for it; a mystery which, among many more, is hid from the wife and prudent, and revealed unto the babes in Chrift. I often lament my unfitness to receive these things, and a disposition, out of the clearness and power of the gospel, to accommodate myself, particularly in company, to a worldly spirit, rather than suffer as a fool for the seed's sake; and yet I trust I am making war against it, and have victory in view.

the

1st month 1788-To be furnished with that excellent armour thou speaks of, is truly defirable, and when without it, the prayer of my heart is, quietly to keep in my tent; and even with it, to make no boast, nor to use it but by renewed commission. It is one of the effentials for the poor christian traveller in every station in life; because of the open attacks, the fide blows, and crafty pursuits of our unwearied adversary. I feel them daily, and long for an increase of strength to resist him, steadfast in the faith. He many times feeks to make our hearts fad, when the Lord has not made them fad, and to perplex and embitter our passage through life, when he perceives that that is the length of his chain. We propose setting off for Cork in the morning. Even that is a burden; and I might foon work myfelf up to believe that I am not able to go half way to Clogheen. How admirably wife, and adapted to the weakness of our frame, was that exhortation of the great Master, "take no thought for to-morrow:" this and fuch like compassionate counsel, sometimes drops into my mind in the midst of my conflicts, and proves to be words of that kind which both winds and waves obev.

2d month 1788—Though the root of any good affection be alive, yet there is but one right feafon prescribed in divine economy for it to manifest itself in the branches, by caufing them to bud, bloffom, and bear fruit; and that being the spring-time of divine favour, when the Sun of Righteousness breaks forth upon the Lord's plantation, we must wait for it in patient, though earnest expectation, that as our abiding is in the allotment of pure wifdom, the winter (however long) will in time be past, the rains and tempests will subside, the time of the finging of birds come, and the voice of the turtle be heard in our land: then, though we enjoy it in but a fmall degree, we can falute each other in spirit and word, and hail all those who, like Mary, are bearing precious feed, let their stations in religious or civil fociety be what they may. A falutation of this fort fprings in my heart to my endeared friends; to the parents who have known Him that is from the beginning, and to the younger branches who have measurably been strengthened to overcome the wicked one; fincerely defiring, that as we have, through abundant mercy, been begotten again to a lively hope by the power of the first refurrection, we may, through our varied exercifes, keep our eye fingle to the preferving power of divine love, and to that inheritance which is incorruptible and fadeth not away, referved in heaven for those who are kept by the virtue thereof, and the precious gift of faith unto the last day. For herein is great joy, when outward circumstances, and the accuser of the brethren speak trouble; here the tribulated christian traveller finds an undefiled rest, and by the light commits his spirit in pure refignation to the guiding hand of Omnipotence; feeling to the confolation of his afflicted foul, that for all his omissions and commissions, he has an advocate with the Father, not an High Priest that cannot be touched with a feeling of our infirmities, but one tempted in like manner, and who knows how to succour those that are tried. Wed might the Pfalmist, who was so largely acquainted with the dealings of infinite wisdom, exclaim, "how excellent is thy loving kindness, O Lord; because thereof, the sons of men put their trust under the shadow of thy wing."

3d month 1788-We were at their week-day meeting here yesterday, and had a large publick meeting in the evening, in both of which, I trust, we were owned by the Master of all rightly gathered affemblies, and might have been more fo, if refignation, and a willingness to appear weak and foolish as we are, had been more experienced. I often think that if, in this respect, we were sufficiently humble, we should fare better than we do; and that, while we were preferved from foolish preaching, the foolishness of preaching (as the worldly wife esteem it) when in the demonstration of the spirit, would be bleffed beyond our conception, and made fomething like the barley loaves by which the multitude were fed. We know our own employments; but the mysterious workings of the heavenly hand, in carrying forward the redemption of the nations from the fall, are wifely concealed from us: yet the inquisitiveness and judgments of the creaturely part, often lead us into discouragements when we should, in the fimplicity of little children, do as we are bidden, and leave the event to Him who knows best how, and when, to use the weak and foolish things of this world, to confound the wisdom of the wife.

3d month 1788—By way of apology for my Q 3 filence

filence let me fay, that writing, in many respects, less suited the disposition and qualifications of my mind, for many months back, than a filent meditation upon the nothingness of felf; which was far from always obstructing the sweet circulation of christian fellowship, and solicitude for the preservation, under the shadow of the Holy Wing, of all those who, by dispensations unerringly wife, are involved in the depths of discouragement and dismay, with respect to their own ability to promote any good word and work, and yet whose diffident minds are often affaulted by the accuser of the brethren. These have, however, no occasion of casting away their confidence, when they reflect upon the many deliverances which they have received through the communication of eternal help, and remember the gracious promise of the great Master, to those who dwell under his righteous government; " lo! I am with you always, even to the end of the world." -You are as epistles written in my heart, wherein I often meditate with fecret comfort, under the belief that you are, in unerring wifdom, defigned to be fellow-helpers in promoting the cause of truth and righteoufness, and fellow travellers in the way thereof. If you meet with trials and difficulties, you know there is nothing new in that; they have ever attended the footsteps of the flock; and when we are careful not to multiply them by any default of ours, they are fo many proofs of our being the followers of a fuffering Lord, which are fealed by our extracting benefit from them, and fanctified by obedience. Hold on then as you have begun; " count nothing too near, or too dear to part with for Christ's fake and the gospel's; fear not that humiliating humiliating baptism, which crucifies us to the world, and the world unto us; and may the Shepherd of Israel lead you as his own sheep, convey to you the indisputable intelligence of his own will, and so preferve you in a state of sidelity to himself, as that none shall be able to pluck you out of his holy Hand!

_____1788—It is a favour that the best root needs no great profession, or specious words to nourish it; it is not strengthened by a multitude of luxuriant branches, though, if it be alive, it will discover itself by little buddings, bloffomings, and fruit. While therefore we are not unprofitably anxious, in time of winter, for that which is not to be had, neither let us be too unconcerned, when the full time is come for the manifestations of the life of the tree, nor count them of little value, but cherish and protect them, lest some indiscreet hand, or spirit in ourselves, should rub off that wherein is hiddenly contained the choicest fruit, and so render the coming of the spring, and the genial influence of the Sun of Righteousness, ineffectual to us. Many cautions are necessary under this simile, for even when a tree bids fair for profiting and enriching those who possess it, if that which it is to produce in the fulness of time, be gathered before it is ripe, it sets the teeth of the eater on edge, and causes the tree to be evil fpoken of. Thus, on many hands, dangers occur to us in the conduct of our gifts, in religious and civil departments. How needful is it then, to ask wisdom where it is to be had, and to use it when we have it; and also to cultivate that prudence which is her fifter in fervice, and which often opposes plans of our own contriving. These are fentiments which, though thrown out to you, tend to shew me where, and how, I often miss my way; and excite me to review the consideration of that merciful kindness, which is sometimes extended to us in a very low estate; when, in our own eyes, we seem most undeserving of that help which can alone lift up our heads in hope, when the sloods of affliction prevail, and the billows pass over us. May we deepen in our experience of the Lord's fatherly dealings with us; that so, approving ourselves more and more babes in Christ, our knowledge of the mysteries of the kingdom may be pure, and of that preserving nature, that never pusses.

Q

tend

_____1788—It is not because thou and thy dear wife were forgotten by us, that neither my husband nor I have, since our return from England, dropped you a line. Silence, on my part, has chiefly originated in a consciousness that I have not been deep enough in my spirit, so to draw water out of the wells of falvation as to be able, in true religious fympathy, profitably to vifit thy often discouraged mind. To feel our incapacity to minister, in a spiritual sense, a cup of cold water to ever so feeble a disciple (unto whom we may nevertheless be bound in a constant friendship) is a merciful impression; because it humbles us, and feals upon our fpirits that invariable truth, that "there is none good but one." What is this fense, but the anointing itself, which has holy certainty in it, seeing that it is no lie. Except it abide in us to this effect, our profession of being believers is vain; we shall grow weary in the christian life, and our own righteousness will soon exhaust our strength: for supplies from the eternal Fountain would foon ceafe were we to appropriate them to the profecution of ends which the Lord never required at our hands, and neglect that life of faith, of humble dependance upon the pure gift, and those precious influences, hope and charity, which constrain us to render unto the great Law-giver, in His time only, whatfoever he requires at our hands, though incomplete and foolish to the unfimplified mind. I often wish, on my own account, to be more in substance than I am. That infinite kindness has made me a partaker of the common falvation, has fhed abroad in my heart a measure of his love, and strengthened me, at times, to lay hold on eternal life, I trust the deceivableness of unrighteousness will never be suffered to draw me from the belief of: but I look at the office of a gospel minister with an awfulness which convinces me, that there are baptisms, humiliations, and deaths peculiar to it; and that, except these are often renewed, in order to strip off the plumage of past experience, and of that knowledge of heavenly things, which, being like yesterday's manna, cannot fustain, but subtilly puffs up the mind, that babe's state, unto which the mysteries of the kingdom are unfolded, is unattainable, and the infcription of holiness unto the Lord is withheld, because they are not cleanfed through the word spoken unto them. What will it do for us, even to be called to the work of the ministry, if we submit not to those purgations which unerring Wifdom appoints? We may become veffels marred on the wheel; or, to use another simile, if we suffer not ourselves, in christian patience, to be bundled up as with the dry rods, and to be as destitute of verdure as they, we may, for want of complying with the appointed means of fruitfulness, frustrate the divine purp le to

Q 5

diftinguish

diftinguish those who are invisibly preserved by the hidden life. Perhaps it may not be unsafe to conclude, that in our society there are such defects; but, as an individual, I find it safest, in conformity to the great Master's command, to judge not, except, through the spirit of the Son, the judgment of the everlasting Father is known: and at such seasons, the mind is too much humbled vainly to feed on this revealed knowledge.

9th month 1788—Thy letter faluted us two days after our arrival at home, and was truly cordial, reviving with great fweetness our love and friendfhip with thee and thy dear wife, and also strengthening our hope, that He who, we trust, directed our steps to your parts, and mercifully preserved us through many jeopardies, will, as you and we furrender ourselves to His all-wise disposal, so carry on the eternal purpose of his will as to increase our fruitfulness to His glory; and though very remotely fituated one from another, make us partakers of the fame living fountain, whose waters purify and gladden the baptized members of the church of Christ where-ever scattered, or however obscured by the general cloud of darkness which the professors of christianity are too apt to content themselves in. But as the eternal purpofes of God are, the election of His own precious feed in us, (the Lamb that was flain) and the reprobation of that spirit or feed of the ferpent, which with all the wrath and artifice of a fallen fon of the morning, is ever feeking to oppose the coming of the kingdom of the Messiah, how ought we to watch and be sober; confidering ourselves no longer safe, nor objects of divine favour, than while our spirits and affections are dedicated to his righteous control, cleanfing and fanctifying by the converting influence of His own power. The feed of the kingdom, through divine mercy remaining in us, and a disposition to cherish and embrace it, preserves from the sin which grieves the Spirit, and leads into death. Wherefore, to stand in that which is elect, and to experience redemption from that spirit which wars with it, ought invariably to be our aim; and if, in a pursuit so essentially necessary, we meet with fuffering and deep spiritual conflict, yet remembering how inferior it all is to what He met with, who being truly the good Shepherd, laid down His life for the sheep; and experiencing Him to be in us the hope of glory, the afflictions of the prefent time are counted light, and the omnipotence of the Lord's everlafting arm (as we fingly depend upon it) found to give victory over the enemies of our own hearts; to lead, in the meekness of wisdom, through perfecutions from without, and to build up in the true faith and steadfastness of the great Captain, who goes forth conquering and to conquer. I know that religion is in a ftate with you, as wellas with us, which requires a patient waiting andquiet hoping for the falvation of God; which is often near to be revealed when we faint in our minds, and therefore fail of inheriting that blefling the patriarch Jacob wrestled for, through a night of faithful and fuccessful exercise. Thy increase in heavenly treasure, my beloved friend and brother in the truth, is fecretly and strongly coveted by me; my heart often meditates upon thy folitary fituation; and, in the renewings of gospel love, thou and thy valuable wife are made like bone of my bone, and flesh of my flesh. May the God of all grace and confolation ftrengthen and fuccour you! and I most affuredly believe he will, as your love of his inward and spiritual appearance, and glorious work among men, grows as a tree of righteoufness, bringing forth fruit in its feafon, and enduring with humble fubmission, every wintry and pruning difpensation. We have heard something of thy profpect of devoting thyfelf to the education of children; a work peculiarly wanted in your fociety, and which, if thou enters into, in the simplicity and fincerity which truth gives, will, there is no doubt. be a bleffing to many, and thou thereby rendered a feeling subscriber to that truth, "he that watereth, is watered himfelf." Thou mayest find it an arduous undertaking, and attended with mortifying circumstances; but the liberal foul (though it may fuffer) knows best how to travel profitably through them all. It is not human approbation that we ought to depend upon, or have fingly in view; but our fludy should be to shew ourselves approved unto God; and then, whatever vocation in His wifdom we are placed in, or however weak we may feel ourfelves, we shall have no just cause to be ashamed.

11th month 1788—I can feelingly subscribe to the truth of what thou sayes, that it is good to spend one's days in the bands of a free and sincere friendship, and in the unity of a solid and constant saith. We are sayoured with many in these parts, who have been mercifully gathered to the pure spring of eternal life, where true love and unity originate, and from whence they bring forth acceptable fruits; but, as those consolations sometimes abound, so do tribulations, on account of the spirit of the world, and many other fnares, by which the enemy of all good is daily feeking to draw afide; and for want of watchfulness and care, he prevails to the great hurt of some, and casting a shade over the purity and fimplicity that there is in the gospel of Christ. So that, notwithstanding we are encompassed with many bleffings and advantages, we are not without our portion of trials; and can therefore, in much fympathy and love, dip in spirit with thee, and feel thee as a fellow traveller in that path of fuffering and probation which, in infinite Wisdom, is cast up for the regeneration and establishment of all those who walk in it, and hold out unto the end. Fear not, neither be difmayed, though thou feel thyfelf as a folitary bird, as a pelican in the wilderness, or a sparrow upon the house top; He that is in thee, is greater than he that is in the world; His wisdom will direct thee, His counsel guide thee, and His everlasting omnipotent arm fustain thee, as thy faith is steadfast therein, and thy patience maintained in travelling through the abasing dispensations which may fall to thy lot: for I do believe thou art intended to be a man for God, and no wonder then, if thou fuffer persecution and affliction: remember they are but for a moment, and light, compared with that exceeding and eternal weight of glory, which is revealed to the poor distressed mind, when it looks beyond the "things which are feen, to the things which are not feen." I feel much love to the dear young people among you, and shall be glad for them to be told so; and that the good account thou fent respecting them has rejoiced the hearts of many. If they follow on to know the Lord, their minds will increase in holy stability; stability; the enjoyments of this world will fade in their view; and an inward acquaintance with the Spirit of Truth will become most precious to them; they will not do their works (like the Pharises) to be seen of men, but the solidity and weightiness of their spirits, will demonstrate that they have been with Jesus, from whom they receive all their qualifications to perform true worship, or to do any thing that is good.

10th month 1788-Thy letter, which arrived about a week ago, was fweetly refreshing and truly falutary to us; and I may now tell thee, that though acceptable, as an individual I needed it not to revive the strength of affectionate attachment; for my spirit often embraces thee in the flowings of increasing love and fellowship, and feels thee, according to my fmall measure of true knowledge, in that precious unity which is better than all words (though ever fo frequently and finely expressed) without it. Were it not for this cordial drop, which, like oil, fometimes fwims on the top of our bitterest cups, our faith would hardly be ftrong enough to make us victorious over even the little perplexities attendant upon this pilgrimage and state of probation; but He who knows that we are "feeble folk," and graciously compassionates our case, becomes to us not only the shadow of a mighty rock in a weary land, but teaches us fo to build our nest therein, that, in times of ftorm and trial, his holy enclosure preserves us, his faith stays us, and this rock pours out precious oil. May our dwelling ever be here, and our inheritance be enlarged in that which is pure! then, let our allotments be what they may, whether our bodies inhabit the dark, or the more illuminated parts of the earth;

earth; whether we are encompassed with forrow and travail, or have to rejoice more fensibly in the revealed salvation of the Almighty Arm; all will work together for good, and we grow in qualification to worship and magnify that great and excellent Name, which only is worthy of the incense that in every place and situation is to be offered.

11th month 1788-If I know my own heart, it is my defire to know my bufiness, and simply to do it, whether it is taken cognizance of, or not, by the truly wife and honourable; whose friendship, though strengthening, consoling, and therefore acceptable, may (if the heart be not in some degree redeemed and redeeming from the mysterious workings of selflove) be perverted, and instead of nourishing the pure immortal part, build us up in an airy notion of our own merits and attainments, and prove a fnare instead of a bleffing. A little acquaintance with one's own human nature, a frequent detection of its corruption, and the perplexities into which it introduces us when its fubtil arguments prevail, are enough to weary out a mind bleffed with the leaft fincere aspiration after permanent good, durable riches and righteousness; and to content us in the most obscure situation, if, through unmerited mercy, it may but be in the courts of the Lord; with the coarfest food, if but ministered to us from the hand which is full of bleffings; and under the most unpleafant work, if faith is vouchfafed, that in love and pity it will be accepted. Some of us here feel it to be a low time; my knees often are ready to fmite together, and my foul is exceeding forrowful. That there are causes in myself, and circumstances attending our present situation, I doubt not; " give me wisdom, and reject me not from among thy children," is my secret petition.

11th month 1788-We have twelve girls, and expect more foon; fo that thou wilt believe cares multiply upon us: but, all our endeavours will be ineffectual, both in this, and all other undertakings, except the bleffing which makes truly rich, in unmerited mercy, rests upon them. Did the world know. how dependant all fubstantial comfort and permanent joy are upon this heavenly gift, people in general would toil less, think less of their own wisdom, and more fimply follow that day-star which ariseth in the heart, and directeth to the pure life, in which the Father is well pleafed. It is a comfortable belief to my mind, that thou art arrested by this precious principle of divine light, which discovers things as they really are. Be not afraid to be led by it, into ways thou knowest not, and into paths thou hast not feen; for, in due time, it will dispel the darkness before thee, and make crooked things straight. One of the most beautiful, though most abasing dispensations, in the true christian progress, is that of becoming as a little child; the judgment is here taken away for purification, and to be made truly ufeful in the Lord's work, the foul breathes only to the parent for food, and depends upon no other for counfel. It is generally weak, but knowing itself fo, it is safe: O happy state to be rightly brought into! May we never be ashamed of it, but for our encouragement remember, that of fuch is the kingdom of heaven.

and time, has not been allotted us for the path to folid peace; and if increasing humiliation should prove the food most convenient for us, we wish to accept accept it from that hand, which has an indifputable right to do with us as feemeth good in the fight of infinite wisdom, and which has power to convert the greatest trials into true spiritual refreshment.

—The ways of infinite Wisdom with those He chooses to bring through, and redeem from the fallacy of human understanding, and corrupt nature, are so incomprehensible and humiliating as indeed puts us out of the capacity of faying, "what does thou?" for who hath been his counfellor? seeing he giveth not account to any of his matters, until the simplicity of a babe in Christ is attained unto, when he reveals, according to his purposes, those mysteries unto them, which are hid from the wife and prudent.

-That junction between the monthly meetings is comforting, if only from the strength which the few living members may be fuffered to feel in the unity of one another's spirits, and the blessing which may be upon their endeavours to wash one another's feet, and to bear up one another's hands. That love which has heretofore flowed in my heart as a river, to the poor in spirit on that side the county, fweetly revives as I am writing, under a renewed hope, that the eternal fountain of life will not be closed among them, however low and unworthy they may fometimes feel themselves to be of its pure refreshment. And if it be in abundant mercy kept open, and they that are acquainted with it gather to it, having their qualifications from it, and use them under its influence, they will be a bleffing one to another, and more may be gathered to an inward experience of the same purifying unction, than, in some seasons of discouragement, they have an idea of.

12th month 1788—We have been fitting in a friend's family, where-demonstrated that her mind, through all these storms and tempests, has found where to anchor and unload her veffel, with an increase of simplicity and obedience. I wish she may now leave the things that are behind; and that we may all become more and more, not only as children, but as weaned children. To be reduced to this humbled state, has not only its mortifications, but its joys. The christian's life confisteth not in the abundance of the apparent confolations and gratifications he possesses; but in the renewal from time to time, of the hidden manna which the golden pot contains, within the veil of perishing things. Thou knowest enough of such situations as ours, to make thee believe we are not without a portion of trials, (no doubt wifely proportioned to us;) yet I dare not complain, having thus far, as we have passed along, found Him whom my foul loveth, in whose presence no murmuring has a right to appear. Childlike fimplicity is an experience which every chosen fervant, however feeble, ought to endeavour for. We get nothing by the contrary; for by ever fo much taking thought, we cannot add one cubit to our stature, or make one hair of our head white or black. May you proceed on this family vifit, in the faith, nothing doubting. It was not the abundance of bread, nor yet the fineness of it, which fed the multitude formerly. For want of faith, we lose many miracles which the bleffing would still effect. Remember poor David's sling and stone, and out of whose mouths, strength and praise are ordained.

12th month 1788—I received thy affectionate fifterly

fifterly falutation, which, like a little help to the weak and feeble, was falutary and acceptable. Be affured I am one of the weak and feeble; may I therefore be wife enough, like those little creatures fpoken of in scripture, which being feeble folk, build their nest in a rock! and truly, dear friend, were it not for the shadow at least, of this Rock, amidst the conflicts between nature and grace, the mind would often be overwhelmed, and make the forrowful conclusion, "there is no hope." Ah this Rock! how fafe a refidence is it! and methinks its obscurity from the worldly wife, and the felfish mind, adds greatly to its fafety. I feldom get to it but by combat, which shews that my enemies are lively; and though it is fometimes my lot, in the crofs, to fet before others their inherent infirmities, and transformed adversary, yet I humbly trust I fhall not, and pray that I never may, forget mine

12th month 1788 - My heart was favoured to enter a little into thy affecting account of dear M. G's. decease, and your united visit previous thereto. That valuable woman's last days being so memorably employed in her Master's service, (after a life of diffidence and obscurity, compared with her religious qualifications, and attachment to the cause of truth) was a distinguishing mark of everlasting love and favour to her. Her close seems so lively, and her fun fet in fuch brightness and serenity, that it conveys fomething animating to those who are far behind in fitness, like myself, to count not their lives dear unto themselves, if they also may so finish their course with joy. And that humble tribulated disciple L. H. appears also ready to rise triumphant above above death, hell, and the grave: all that is covetous within me exerts itself in the prospect of the joyous fettlements of fuch travailing fouls, in undefiled mansions where there is no more change. Oh that I were but as willing to commit my spirit into the divine hand, during my refidence in this poor frail tabernacle, (where there is most need of help) as to inherit the rewards of those who, through more tribulations, more effectual wathing, and better occupation of their gifts, enter into the joy of their Lord! Well! dear friend, fear not though thou haft made an exchange fo unfuited to thy natural disposition in thy present station, He who knows the facrifice, because Himself prepared it, (how little foever thou mayest think due to thyself) will proportionably enrich thee, and prefent thee with the bleffings of his goodness, and crown thee the more with that humility and felf-abasedness which are fo precious in His fight. Were it not that He loved us before we loved Him, peradventure we might fometimes think our lot a hard one, and find fome cause to despair of His mercy, or conclude that His holy eye penetrates not into our lonefome and obscure dwellings (however raifed up as spectacles to angels and to men) neither marks the way that we take. That facred prerogative of the everlafting Father, of attracting and quickening the foul, opening and shutting the heavenly treasury, is, I do believe, the very thing which distracts that mind wherein patience has not had its perfect work, though it is the very thing wherein it ought to glory.

1788—My husband and I received thy letter of affection for us, and lamentation over thy-felf. Our minds are drawn into near fympathy with thee, and we believe that this afflictive dispenfation, is defigned for thy increasing acceptance with the Father of spirits, who knows best how to purify the vessels of His own house. These, thou knowest, are not only to be of gold, but of beaten gold, in order to fashion them according to His good pleasure, and render them fit for the inscription of holiness. Now, my dear friend, as thy heart's desire is to repose thyself in the joys of God's falvation, endeavour to attain that holy quietude, wherein the delufions of the grand enemy are baffled, and the tribulated spirit is strengthened to receive the bitterest cup with thanksgiving. We are of ourselves very weak, and it is sometimes confistent with infinite Wisdom, that we should be left to a deep fense thereof, that no flesh may glory in His presence; but that the hunger, the thirst, and the humiliation of the foul, may be fully proved. Therefore marvel not, as though fome new thing had happened unto thee. It was the path which the holy Apostle was led in, when he declared on his own, and his brethren's behalf, that they had the fentence of death in themselves, that they should not trust in themselves, but in God who raiseth the dead: and we have many inftances in our fociety in these parts, of upright-hearted advocates of the christian religion being tried with deep poverty of fpirit, and discouragement in the prospect of the Lord's work, and of their own incapacity to perform it. We have also instances of these humiliations tending to root them deeper in the experience of that fundamental truth, that the true believers in Christ have received an anointing which abideth in them, and need not that another should teach them, but as this fame anointing teacheth them, which is truth, and is no lie. And being thus led on to a higher degree of union and fellowship with the Father, and with the Son, their qualifications have increased to endure, for the precious seed's sake, the watchings, the fastings, and the deaths many, unto which, according to our measure, we are all, in this mixed state of things, called. And when their mouths have been opened again in the congregation of the people, they have depended the more fingly and fimply upon divine impulse, and the puttings forth, and strengthening virtue of the Shepherd of Israel. Thus the exercised have been benefitted, and the Lord's heritage comforted. I humbly truft, that these bleffings will refult from thy late tribulations; and that thou wilt have to fay, hitherto the Lord (and not man) hath helped me. It is to be lamented when, for want of these baptisms of spirit, a fuperficial ministry, and activity in the church prevail; for these are like blasts from the wilderness, which, instead of cherishing, chill the hidden life, and build up in the notion, rather than in the humbling experience of true religion. It is much better to appear nothing when we are nothing; that we may be emptied and cleanfed from all felf-love, and learn patience and contentedness therewith. I falute thee in christian love and sympathy, and as a tribulated fellow-traveller encompassed with manifold infirmities, remain thy friend and fifter in the truth.

Ist month 1789—My mind has often fecretly vifited and sympathized with thee, under the various and deep exercises which I do believe have fallen to thy lot, in the course of unerring wisdom; but it has as often feemed more my business, thus filently to feel thee under the precious influence of that love which the children of the one Almighty Father feel towards each other, than to be forward in expressing it. He who has graciously called thee out of darkness into his marvellous light, turned his hand upon thee for good, and thus far, fustained thee through many refining dispensations, will not now leave thee, when Jordan may rife high, and feem to overflow its banks; but in his own due and appointed time, which must be waited for, he will divide the waters, and discover to thee, with indisputable clearness, a way where thou hast feen none; yea, according to His promife to His own feed, He will make darkness light before thee, and crooked things straight; these things will he do unto thee, and will not forfake thee. I think I know, (if I am dipped into a right fense of thy state) that the enemy of all good is exceedingly envious against the precious life, or feed of the kingdom, which is divinely intended, through fuffering, to be so brought into dominion, as to establish thee in the liberty of the children of God, whereby thy usefulness in the church, in this dark and cloudy day, will increase. Like the woman that brought forth the man-child, feen by John in the vifion of light and life, thou mayft have to flee into the wilderness for preservation, because of the persecutions of the dragon, and the floods he may be permitted to pour out of his mouth. His enmity remains to be with the pure feed; and they who defire to cherish this excellent treasure, in their earthen vessels, and to live godly in Christ Jesus, must expect many of his cruel affaults, in temptations, provocations, and infinuations: but the Rock of ages remains remains to be their refuge, and as their tribulated spirits endeavour to retire here, and place no confidence in the flesh, notwithstanding it may be with fore conflict they gain this fure dwelling place, they will be amply rewarded, and have, in humility of foul, to rejoice in the impregnableness of the defence, and to magnify the power through which all things are possible. Whatever has a tendency to fubject and reduce the creaturely part in us, however bitter its operations may be, is gratefully to be received by the upright foul, as one of the means whereby the adoption, and inheritance of the glorious promifes of the gospel, is attained; and one of those bitter things which to the truly hungry foul is fweet. Therefore, let me fay unto thee, fear not, thy God is with thee, and will work for thee, as thou art willing to have all the refistance of thy nature to every of his holy requisitions, wrought upon and fubdued, in the day of his power. The just are to live by faith, that faith which gives the victory, and triumphs over death, hell, and the grave. Mayst thou fight the good fight thereof; and may I be thy companion in this necessary warfare; that fo the attacks of our grand adversary upon fuch christian virtues as have been mercifully conceived in our fouls, may all be rendered frustrate; and we abiding under the facred influence of the powerful word of patience, may often have our spiritual eye opened to look beyond the things which are feen, to the things which are not feen; and for this joy set before us, count not our lives dear unto ourfelves, neither love them unto death! Though my heart, as I faid in the beginning, has fecretly vifited and faluted thee, yet I had no thought of expreffing prefling so much on these solemn subjects, when I took up my pen; but only just to convince thee that thou hast in me (though I acknowledge I was restrained in thy company lately from shewing it) a sympathizing friend and sister, according to my measure. Though, dear friend, we may be led in silent travail, and as by the gates of hell and death, yet let us remember, that this is the way in which inscrutable wisdom has ever led his redeemed children in all ages.

Ist month 1789—There are seasons wherein the Bridegroom of souls withdraws himself, or, as to the sensible enjoyment of his sacred soul-enriching presence, is taken away, and then the children of the bride-chamber cannot but sast and mourn; and as I do believe thou art one of these, thou must learn more and more to endure hardness, and to bear such dispensations with christian fortitude, in that hope which anchors the soul on the invisible Rock of ages. That which is seen is not hope, and therefore, remember that this is the season wherein thy considence in almighty help, thy faith, patience, and servent charity, are to be tried, rather than when the bridegroom is obviously with thee, when thou canst not fail to rejoice.

2d month 1789—Thy letter addressed to my hufband, M. D. and myself, was very satisfactory to us; as we found thereby that the precious unity of the spirit was mercifully preserved in thy mind and ours, notwithstanding our remote situation, and our own peculiar impediments to the growth of this immortal plant. We all feel, at times, our faith to be closely tried, and this hath been the experience of those in all ages who were pressing after a city which hath foundations; the spirit of this world, and the corruptions of our own nature, with great subtilty, oppose the government of the Son of Peace in the heart, wherein the unity of the one fpi-These enemies of our own houses, are the great objects of the spiritual war; and as we maintain that by the aid of spiritual weapons, our faith will grow ftronger by its manifold provings, and a victorious fight will at last abundantly compenfate for every afflictive dispensation, and conflict of foul. Let patience then have its perfect work, that thou mayst "be perfect and entire, (as faith the Apostle) lacking nothing." Many friends here, who love you in the truth, have fympathized with you on account of your late prospect of suffering, concerning what some of you apprehend to be the law of your God; and your relief therefrom is equally rejoicing. Is it not cause of humble thankfulness, that fome weak minds are spared from giving publick demonstration of their fidelity to the christian religion, at a time when, peradventure, their faith therein was not strong enough to be accompanied by fuch works? A query of this fort to themselves ought deeply to convince them of this renewed obligation they are under to their heavenly father, "whose eyes run to and fro in the earth, beholding the evil and the good; and that nothing fhort of increasing faithfulness to known duty, and watchfulness thereunto in spirit, can render them approved in the fight of fo gracious a Being. We are glad to believe there are fincere-hearted men and women among you; may these be of one heart and one mind, walking "by the fame rule, and minding the fame thing," gathering together in the facred Name, and diligently diligently waiting therein the time which infinite wisdom prescribes, (though in ever such humiliation to the creature) before the people's minds are drawn to outward testimonies. Oh strengthen one another in this holy exercise! It is effential for gospel ministers to experience; that therein the spirits may be tried, every transformation of the enemy judged down, and the fuffering feed of the kingdom only exalted. If this reduction of felf, and all felfish working, were the object of your strong and feeble members, your affemblies would be folemn, your feeding would be upon the bread of life, and your fouls would worship and adore the divine Presence, which delights to dwell in you, and among you. Thy account of the young people's faithfulness was acceptable; and, with thee, "I wish it may be a fincere step towards virtue." Hearing of the two marriages likely to be fo agreeably accomplished, is also pleasant; and I hope that the reflection will be lastingly comfortable to the parties when their minds are growing under the influence of heavenly dew, and in obedience to the cross of Christ.

2d month 1789—If you fully knew the state of our minds, and how closely they have been occupied since our parting from you, I am ready to conclude, that sometimes you could hardly have refrained from dropping us a word in season. Perhaps it is self-love which directs to this vein of consolation; an hunger after sensible enjoyments, which generally manifests itself to be insatiable, and the seeding of which seldom strengthens the root and ground of true christian fellowship. It has been our lot, and I doubt not but it has been yours, since we saw each other, to pass through trials inward and outward; wherein nothing short of the Arm of Omnipotence could profitably fustain and bring through: O! that our faith may be strengthened in it; that as our race will foon be run, we may, during its humiliating course, invariably pursue the one thing needful, Then will our steps, amidst the briers and thorns of this world, and all the chilling blafts. of its spirit, be rewarded in the riches of the mercy. of Him who trod the path before us. I remember the unity we were favoured to feel in our little fervices, and the uninterrupted harmony of our connection as companions; and these things have left upon my mind impressions too facred to be lost in forgetfulness. Instead of their dying, I think of late they have been replenished with a degree of the best life: and as we endeavour simply to move in the lots affigned us by our all-wife Creator, however diftant our outward dwellings may be, the immortal part will not fail to affimilate us in the precious covenant of love and life. It is a wonderful union which christian travellers enjoy, when they meet one another in spirit. Though their communications be mournful, yet understanding each other's language, and being companions, they are encouraged and strengthened thereby, to proceed on their journey towards a city which hath foundations, whose peace is everlasting.

3d month 1789—The precious evidence of peace, is one of those rare and valuable flowers, that feem in danger of withcring with too much display in the open air. The shade, we are sometimes favoured to retire to, when the world may judge us in its own sluctuating spirit: "when thou prayest, enter into the closet and shut the door," &c.

3d month 1789—It is a very low time with me. There are few I believe that need fuch baptisms as myfelf, and therefore it is, no doubt, best for me to bear them as quietly and profitably as I can. He with whom we have to do, afflicts not willingly the children of men, and therefore, if our afflictions are not of our own bringing on, they are a part of the work of that righteousness which produces quietness and affurance for ever. We must not expect to pass through the present vale of tears, without bearing our proportion of fuffering, for the body's fake, and those abasements which are so necessary for our own prefervation in the truth. Wherefore let us be patient, and establish our hearts, that fo we may not be moved or turned away from the hope of the gospel, but through all, stand in the faith that the day of the Lord draweth nigh. We often find, to the mortification of the creature, that times and feafons are not at our command, nor even for us always to know: it is the divine prerogative to dispose of them; and the human mind is taught thereby its own dependancy, and driven in quest of that faith by which the just live. Faith removes our doubts, anchors the foul when upon the fluctuating waters of uncertainty, " is the very fubstance of things hoped for, and the evidence of things not feen." Fight, my beloved friend, the good fight thereof, and give no place to the accuser; so will thy possession of this heavenly gift increase, thy offerings will continue to be acceptable, and victory become fealed to thee when the combat is over.

3d month 1789—If thou and I are really favoured with the precious evidence of gospel union, let us be tenacious of its purity. On thy part, do not fail to "exhort and reprove with all authority," even when the deceitfulness of my heart judges itself better than it is. What fignifies that part in us which cannot inherit the kingdom? I cannot fay that I am light hearted, though it is comfortable to believe thy burdens decrease; nor do I wish to cast a gloom upon, and cloud that sky, which, after much tempestuous weather, and a frequent oppressive atmosphere, may attract the strengthened fight to greater heights of clearness and purity, than, in some past seasons, the nature of things would allow. I congratulate thee as one, not only beholding the vision, but gradually and effectually afcending the ladder which reaches from earth to heaven; on which, methinks, the descending angels are fent to strengthen poor weary pilgrims. May I be thy companion; not fo much for the fake of thy company, though that is truly pleafant, as for the glorious rest within the pearl gates, when the tribulated steps to it shall for ever cease. I believe I do not fo frequently write to any one on this subject as to thyself; and I would not have thee think that my conversation is proportionably in heaven. These prospects animate the foul; but the discouragements and persecutions from that which is born of the flesh, seem as if they would drag every holy aspiration into the mire and the clay of the horrible pit.

5th month 1789—It just occurred to me as I took up the pen, that probably there is a greater fimilarity in our exercises, than we are generally aware of, and perhaps we are oftener dipped into sympathy one with another than we are capable of perceiving.

perceiving. Religious sympathy is I am persuaded a great mystery. The apostle sought to fill up that which remained (of his portion) of the fufferings of Christ, for the church's fake; and may we be like minded respecting those baptisms, which introduce into a fellowship with the effectual sufferings of the Lamb, and work in us a conformity to His death; thereby qualifying, through the power of His resurrection, to demonstrate, that they are not only for our own, but also for the church's fake. Under these dispensations, can we fail, at times, of feeling ourselves alone? We should not be exercised according to our measures, in his tribulated path, if, in the awful moment when the crucifixion of our wills is approaching, our affociates and friends frood around us with the cup of confolation; no! it were his enemies then who, hastening their own destruction, pierced him, and ministered the vinegar and the gall. Let us then seize the comparison for our humiliation. Christ in us can unseal the mystery, and amidst His holy leadings in the regeneration, can renew the drooping mind with the confoling language of, " fear not, greater is He that is in you, than he that is in the world." I wish that thy mind may be encouraged, without unprofitable reasoning, to labour onward in the hidden paths and pilgrimage of the Jew inward. Thou hast put thy hand to a good work, for which I do believe thou art chosen. The enemy of all good, will, as formerly, feek to destroy the immortal birth, and not fail to cast forth floods out of his mouth, and represent them to be the minifration of just condemnation. To be preserved from this attack upon thy best life, peradventure thou mayest be induced to slee into the wilderness, where methinks I now visit thee, and where thou wilt not be suffered to fall; but thou wilt be suftained with the bread which the world knows not of, and come forth in the appointed time, more and more weaned from all human dependancies.

5th month 1789-Few fources of comfort prefented at the opening of these mixed affemblies, and unless the one great source of light and purity produces to the believers the newness of the spirit, they cannot but fast; and well is it for them, when, to their fasting, they can acceptably add mourning. For my part, I have in general through the course of the fittings of this meeting (which are mostly gone through) felt myself something like Mary, who fat at the bleffed Mafter's fepulchre, with a language fimilar to that of " they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid Him." To thy fympathetic mind, this may be a fufficient description how things have gone with thy Sarah Grubb. Perhaps in the last moment of extremity (for fometimes we are wifely tried to the last) the joyful tidings may falute the spiritual ear, " thy Lord is risen, and behold he goeth before thee;" this is the crown of all true rejoicing; this is the bleffing of which the creature must ever acknowledge itself unworthy. It is a knowledge which indeed puffeth not up; and were it not that Lucifer, that fallen fon of the morning, is feeking to intrude, and fometimes does intrude himself, and attracts the unwary mind to fome mountain of felf exaltation, peradventure the manifestations and confolations of the Spirit, would more often, and more eminently abound among the Lord's Lord's visited and adopted children. "Feed me then with food convenient for me, lest I be full and deny thee:" O desirable refignation!

5th month 1789-I was forry to hear that thy mind was still in so dejected a state. Causes for situations of this fort cannot always be comprehended by us, and therefore we ought to be careful how we conclude that they either are, or are not, in the ordering of best Wisdom. One thing however affords confolation to the truly contrite mind; that all things shall work together for good to those who love and fear God. As I do believe, thou art one of those, and that thou fincerely defirest also to walk acceptably before Him, learn more and more, patiently and thankfully, to receive from His holy hand, whatfoever He appoints or permits, as difpenfations which he only can fanctify. It is a fort of school the mind has to enter into, when sensible of its own infirmities, it purfues the things of the kingdom, and the knowledge how to discern them from the mysterious workings and cogitations of corrupt felf. It has many lessons to learn, hard to flesh and blood; and perhaps one of the most difficult is, to think nothing too hard, nothing too near or dear to part with, for the fake of the prize in view. And were we thoroughly to learn it, I believe it would clothe us with many amiable and profitable dispositions, which murmuring Israelites have feldom time to discover.

6th month 1789—Thou art often very near and dear to me; and I have felt it renewedly during the course of the exercising meetings we have had here: for true love sometimes springs up, and attracts our attention to some suffering object, when we are ready to think ourselves destitute of its facred virtue, and too much scattered in mind from its hidden track livingly to converse with it. So, my dear friend, it has often been with me fince we faw each other; believing that thou hast trials peculiar to thyfelf, and peradventure, art too much depressed therewith. Let not any discouragement fink thee below an holy confidence, that the everlasting Arm is underneath; and that, if thou " deal thy bread to the hungry, and thy water to the thirfty foul, thy light shall break forth out of obscurity, and thy darkness become as the noon-day." Believe not the most subtil infinuation, that thy passage through life will continue thorny as it is; for it is in the deceivableness of unrighteoufness that these things are suggested to us, in order to remove us from that steadfastness and hope of the gospel, in which visited minds are designed to be established.

7th month 1789—My heart and eyes have been afresh affected by a lively revival of days that are past: days of fore tribulation, when the old heavens and old earth were passing away, and a capacity unbegotten to rejoice in the discovery of the new. Yea, they were days when the battle was hot between flesh and spirit; and for want of being accustomed to the weapons of warfare, mind and body were wearied, and the vitals of both nearly overcome. When I reflect upon the kindness of infinite goodness many ways manifested to my weak state, and the ingratitude of my heart, I wonder at the long forbearance, and continued effusions of the quickening and purifying virtue of the immortal Word: I wonder at my present hackbackwardness in the christian life; and my want of zeal in the pursuit of the one thing needful. May thy bosom friend and thyself, be so helpful and bleffed to each other, as, in the facred covenant wherein ye are bound, unitedly to firetch forth your hands, unfettered by any thing of your own, and let another bind, or gird you, even though you may be carried thereby whither ye would not. The inexpressibly near unity and affection which I felt with, and for your spirits, in our late and fhort junction, has left a fweet and confoling favour behind; which now, and fometimes, when a different influence would prevail, springs up as under the threshold of the door, and rifes until it becomes a river, which my often tried mind meafurably rejoices and fwims in. Count not your lives dear unto yourselves, when called for at your hands; and when not, labour after tranquillity of foul; remembering, that, however little and poor ye may be, ye cannot, by taking ever fo much thought, add one cubit to your stature. But refignation itself is a gift. Oh that ye may covet the best gifts! for it is as we have them in view, and pray for them, according to the mind of the fpirit, that we receive.

8th month 1789—Thou art, dear friend, ansepiftle written in my heart, where I fometimes read thee, and thy mournful, humble steppings with joy; confistent with the divine command, to rejoice in his new creation, of which, in infinite mercy, thou art happily a part; having known old things to pass away, and new ones to be brought in, where the rightcousness of the creature is beheld to be as filthy rags; and where the rightcousness righteousness of God, the obedience of faith, dwells. Let it dwell, and more and more abound in thy experience; for thereby thy strength will increase, and nothing, in divine appointment, will be found too hard for thee to perform. In true fimplicity, to lean upon and follow the Beloved of fouls, is a wonderful prefervation from that reasoning, and vain confultation with flesh and blood, which diftracts the mind, and often causes it to err from the faith. It is true our spiritual guide, for wise purposes, conceals himself from us, the bridegroom is taken away, and then the disciples cannot but mourn; and better it is for them that they should mourn, than enter into the remotest confederacy with his enemy against him, call in question His manifestations, and doubt whether He is to us that friend, of whom He has given us in broad day light, living proofs. An unbelieving heart is a temptation most subtil, and often very plausibly presented. Beware of it, dear friend! Be not afraid to have thy foolishness for Christ's sake perfected; for his gospel, which is the power of God unto falvation to all them that believe, is a fund of requifites for the christian traveller; from the babe's to the strong man's food, the clothing of the lilies in the heavenly garden, to the accoutrements and victorious armour of the Lamb's foldiers. Fear not therefore, though thou be a child, and feem to thyfelf that thou canft not go; for the Lord hath anointed thee, and will therefore strengthen thee for His work, and feed thee with food convenient for thee.

8th month 1789—You are very often remembered by me in fifterly fympathy and affection, though feldom told of it; and I trust that nothing relating relating to my filence will be able to make different impressions. I find it very difficult in our large family, and amidst other duties than those which relate to it (though but few of them comparatively fall to my lot,) to fit down and quietly converse with my friends; and yet they come upon, or rather arrest, my mental attention, when in the very thick of cares and anxieties; fo that I hope the invisible intercourse of kindred spirits, is less dependant upon outward and visible signs, than we fometimes imagine; and peradventure, the more we look beyond the things that are feen, to the things that are not feen, the more we then possess the very thing which our natures prompt us to toil for. Nevertheless, as a secondary consolation, it is lawful thus to commune. Your last joint epistle was to me a pleafant repast, though some of its ingredients were bitter herbs: you know fo well how, in every new dispensation, to look to "the great first cause," and to wait for that fanctification of the Spirit, which caufeth all things to work together for good to them that love Him, that it feems unnecessary for me to remark upon it; an entire freedom clothes my mind respecting you; yea, and I may add, a belief that your bitterest cups will be fweetened in the due and appointed time. To wait for that, has often been hard duty to the hastiness of my desires. But were we not to be so exercifed; where or how could we obtain profitable experience in the christian's path? how could we live by faith, when all things were accountable to us? or when arrive at the quiet and fafe harbour of pure refignation, if the storms of carnal reasoning were never to rife? There is a great and an attainable attainable purity in that state of mind, which forbears to judge even in its own cause; which, in fingleness, casts its burden upon the Lord, and accepts every permitted tribulation and chaftifement, as a renewed feal of adoption, and evidence of our being intended to be joint heirs with Christ; and therefore bound and induced, by the unfailing mercies of God, to follow through all, our holy Head; and by the increase of his spirit, not to fear humbly to breathe the language of Abba Father. I look up with an emulous eye, to an experience which I generally live far short of: but let us press forward, for we shall reap if we faint not. You are a collection of chosen vessels at that place. Oh fuffer not the enemy to put in his cloven foot among you, for he mars the purest. defigns; and to frustrate the gracious intention, of the Lord's children being helpmeets to each other, is one of his most subtil attempts. When there are storms at sea, vessels are often scattered, and hid one from another; perhaps all equally toffed: but there is a voice which both winds and waves obey, and which unites them again. Have faith in it, and wait for it, and ye shall do well ...

8th month 1789—As children of the fame family, I believe it allowable for us to commune together at times, as we walk in the way and are fad; for, methinks, the mafter has herein joined himself to us, and I trust will graciously continue to do so, as we hold fast our integrity, and become more and more skilful in lamentation. Elijah, in a time of deep revolt, thought himself alone, and faw Israel with an eye clouded by discouragement, until He who knows all things revealed to him his own preserved seed. In the word of eternal life only, is certainty. Well! they that feared the Lord spake often one to another: I look at thee, dear friend, as having very few to speak to who understand the Hebrew tongue; one of the characteristicks of many in this day who are called chriftians is, that they are half Jew and half Ashdod; but even at this be not too forrowful: "when father and mother for sake thee, the Lord will take thee up," and become Himfelf the fupplier of all thy wants. Who knows but He may make thee an instrument for the turning of many to a pure language, and inducing them to call upon the facred name, the refuge and fanctuary of the righteous; that so they may be preserved in the secret places of the Almighty, until His indignation be overpast. Be a faithful watchman; yea be willing and thankful to become the most menial in the spiritual family. This humility will, with the bleffing, insure thy preservation, and at times furnish thee with that bread of eternal life, which the world knows not of.

oth month 1789—I wish we could more frequently converse upon our various concerns, believing that each of us finds them at times awfully important, and attended with their peculiar perplexities. A little company in such paths has a cheering effect, as it feldom happens, in the right ordering of things, that all are sinking under discouragements together; and therefore they can the better speak comfortably when some or other fensibly possesses the precious gift of faith, which peradventure all are nevertheless living by.

My head often feems dropping below water;

yea, there are feafons when the billows actually pass over; and, through unutterable mercy, they do pass over, and beyond the present trials. Sowing as in tears, in the variety of ground which we find among the children, my strength gets renewed; and my foul begotten again to a lively hope, that infinite kindness will, in His own time and way, bless our feeble endeavours to prepare subjects for the kingdom of the Prince of peace. It is little we can do; but that little let us labour to perform acceptably to the Almighty Father, and leave the world to gaze upon us, and judge of us as it may: for when we take its sentiments into confideration, or put them in competition with our foul's peace, it is like that false balance which is an abomination to the Lord; whereas the just weight (an implicit attention and obedience to divine requisition) is His delight. I wish, dear friends, that your hands may be strengthened, in the faithful discharge of your duty towards the numerous family you prefide in: for the more you erect the standard of truth there, the more your services in fociety will increase; and what is still better, the deeper your spirits will get in the undefiled confolations of the humble followers of Jesus. These are worth fuffering for, and they abound in proportion to our tribulations for His fake.

oth month 1789—I am truly glad thou ftands for dedicated to pour water on the hands of this fweet spirited friend; believing such a disposition, conceived in the integrity of the heart, is often acceptable to, and blessed by, the good Spirit which renews the hope of the humble, and revives the minds of the contrite ones. Let not the usual discouragements to these little furrenders, so prevent thee from following on to the full performance, as to rob thee of the reward of enriching peace, and the increase of thy experience in the work wherein thou art, beyond all doubt to my mind, rightly introduced. Having put thy hand to the plough, it is not now a day for thee to look back. " Remember Lot's wife," has often been an instructive caution, and lesson of peculiar instruction to my mind, when in danger of giving up my fpiritual travail, and, rather than diftinguish myself from those to whom my steppings appeared foolishness, tempted in the bitterness of my spirit, to fay, " I will speak no more in thy name." The old heavens and the old earth will (I trust) yield thee no more of their forbidden delights; and therefore, how unwife would it be, through an imperfect obedience, to deprive thy tribulated spirit of that undefiled rejoicing, which is peculiar to the new creation of God. I mean not, by this folicitude respecting thee, to be the means of promoting an activity from under the renewed influence of pure wifdom, or even the premature disclosing of openings into the undoubted mysteries of the kingdom; for it is a great but necessary attainment, to know how to keep the Lord's fecrets, and when to reveal them. But a truly refigned and humble state of mind is a continual facrifice, and will produce the fruit of the Spirit; fo that I wish for thee and myself, that this root of the matter may be found in us; then, as steady and uniform travellers we shall gain ground in the new and living way; and leaving the things that are behind, shall reach forth to those that are before, having our eye fingle unto Jesus, who also took up the cross and despised the shame.

10th month 1789—I feel myself nearly interested in thine and thy wife's welfare, and am pleafed with every renewed capacity to fympathize with you in fpirit, knowing, that if you dwell in that faith which overcomes the world, you must often experience trials of it, and, for its refinement, be baptized into a fense of your own weakness; perhaps so much so, as to acknowledge, with the holy Apostle, that we have the fentence of death in ourselves, that we should not trust in ourselves, "but in God who raiseth the dead." If this is your exercise, be encouraged to faithfulness herein. There are many who willingly cry, hofanna to him who cometh in the name of the Lord, but who are not bound enough in heart to the pure feed of divine light, to watch and to fuffer with it, at a time when there is no form nor comeliness in it; and when it feems no otherwise to operate in the foul than by making the creature abhor itself. These take not that root in religion, and have not that holy communion or fellowship with the Father and with the Son, which qualifies the watchful chriftian foul undoubtedly to know when good cometh; to rejoice in themselves, and not in another; yea, and to bear testimony, in the quickening virtue of truth, that the Lord is rifen. I greatly defire thy prefervation, dear friend, believing that thou art defigned for an instrument in the Lord's hands, to carry on his work, his great and marvellous work, among a benighted and rebellious people, and to be the means, in the little fociety thou art joined to, of drawing them, by thy example as well as precept, from the "lo here is Christ, and lo he is there," to the kingdom of heaven in themselves; and of infiructing them in patient waiting for its coming. This being a part of thy office, I know thou must endure much hardness, and meet with persecution in thyself, and in others; because the enemy of all good will transform himself as into an angel of light, and try to beguile both the fimple, and those who are meafurably inftructed in the kingdom: but take for thy example a faithful fervant * of Jesus Christ, who fled as the dove to the window of the ark, and stood still in that watch. Then wilt thou be rewarded with the fulness of joy, at the coming of thy Lord, without whom thou canst do nothing; strength will be given thee faithfully to bear those christian testimonies, in which thou hast most surely believed, and also to suffer for them, if it be the Master's will. Then will the light in thee be more and more useful in the house, and the weightiness and reverence of thy spirit, excite the beloved youth also to purchase the field where the pearl lies. May I be thy companion in these exercises! my attainment in religious knowledge is finall; and without frequent baptisms of spirit, and watchings unto prayer, I find even that little might foon be taken away. Let me have thy prayers and the sympathy of thy fpirit, when ever the pure light teaches thee fo to do. It is a comfort to us to feel thee, and fome others of your little flock, in the precious covenant of love and life, wherein we defire to be remembered by you and by them.

of joy to me. I wonder not at it, because thou wast

^{*} See William Leddra's epistle in Piety Promoted.

strengthened to humble thyfelf as a little child; and therefore, on the wings of faith and love, art thou exalted to behold and aspire after the hope of thy calling, and even to rejoice in the renewed prospect of the land which is very far off. Ah! how often our spiritual eye wants purging and re-anointing, in order to fee thefe things, and in our measure, to " behold the King in his beauty;" and even when it is so prepared, wisdom, infinite wisdom, presents it at times with objects more conducive to the establishment of the mind upon the Rock alone, by leaving it fo destitute of sensible enjoyment, that it loaths itfelf, feelingly crics out, "without thee I can do nothing," and panteth, like the hart after the water brooks, for Shiloh, the River of life. Here (in another metaphor) is Christ the Rock found, whereon, a truly religious weariness (not impatience) of this world, and the things thereof, tend to build, frablish and strengthen us. We are but sojourners here; let us then, with becoming earnestness of spirit, invariably feek a city which bath foundations; the very knowledge of whose Builder and Maker is life eternal. Thou art right, my dear friend, in believing me to be in a tried low state of mind, though thou art the first that seems to know any thing of it. I mourn over myfelf, not knowing why it is so with me. As to opening my mouth in our meetings, it feems as far from me as if I had never known fuch a concern. A painful gloomy exercise, or a wandering imagination, is what I have principally to travail through; and yet, having been acquainted with a fituation of mind much more destitute than this, I dare not but confider the invisible support my foul is bleffed with, as an object of reverent gratitude.

tude. Well might David (who knew the various dispensations of the Lord) pray that His holy spirit might not be taken from him, at the same time that he craved the restoration of the joys of His falvation. But let our allotment be what it may, there is some attention to be paid to that precept of the gospel, "to wash and to anoint rather than to appear to men to fast." My situation in this large family, where many have their own exercises to pass through, calls upon me for the practice of every christian virtue which I have, through unmerited mercy, been taught in the school of Christ; and much complaint, or conversation about our inward state, except truth opens the way for it (which I trust is now the case,) rather decreases than increases our strength. We have a friend, bleffed be the great and ever worthy name, that sticks closer than any brother; may we then cleave to Him with full purpose of heart! He can renew our refignation, and abundantly prepare us to fay, " not my will, but Thine be done."

11th month 1789—I am, through infinite kindness, convinced that the immortality of the soul is manifest in the spiritual communion which, according to our measures, we experience in these mortal bodies, independant of every medium originating in the invention of man; and though a very desective purity occasions with me a very desective enjoyment of it, yet I feel at times a holy resolution to hold fast that which I have of the unspeakable gift of faith, and to accept it as an earnest of the inheritance, until, by greater degrees of light, love, and life, the redemption of the purchased possession. That thou art my companion herein, and in hidden conflict for this glorious prize, I feem affured beyond a doubt; and greatly defire that the prefent dispensation of unerring Wisdom may, in proportion to the depths of forrow which thou hast experienced, lead thee up, on confecrated ground, to this dignified attainment. Ah, my friend, these are humble ascendings, because they are the consequence of descending: but they are safe; therefore fear not, O daughter of Zion; lo "I am with thee, saith the Lord; be not dismayed, I am thy God; I will strengthen thee, I will help thee, yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness."

11th month 1789—These are low trying times with us, and particularly to my mind, feeling myfelf often as one that has abundant need to go down again to the potter's house; and, through divine favour, strength is at times afforded to descend in spirit to where a right and true sense of myself, and the purity of the cause I am sometimes engaged to advocate, is obtained. We often have need of the prayers, and fympathy of each others spirits, and oh! that we may be kept in that faith which gives the victory, fo as to wreftle effectually for the renewed supplies of the Spirit, that none of the difcouragements of our day may prevail against us. I know thou hast thy secret provings; but fear not, " greater is He that is in thee, than he that is in the world." We have champions in this land, who feem to defy little David's fimplicity; but if those who go forth against such in your parts, as well as here, do it in the name of the Lord God of the armies of Ifrael, and with those weapons which He approves, victory will finally be on their fide.

the

11th month 1789-I have long feen it necessary to watch my own heart, left while I nourished an approved christian sympathy with my fellow pilgrims, and manifested it in the line of apprehended duty, I should also draw their attention and affections to myfelf, and thereby wound the pure life by strengthening the root of felf love in both; and instead of building up in the most holy faith, and in a fingle dependance upon the one true and everlasting Lawgiver, make such a composition of nature and grace, as would keep the mind in fermentation, rather than in perfect peace; rob of His honour the Captain of our falvation; and prevent those mighty works being done in His name which call for the fingleness of the believing heart. I have beheld an evil like this in our camp. and its impediment to the growth of visited minds to that stature in Christ, to which their peace asfuredly called them. Do not mistake me; I reverence the bond of christian fellowship, and in a fense of the fellowship itself, with its facred confoling unction, my spirit has often been dissolved. and fervently craved its increase in myself and others: yea, I have rejoiced in the flowings of that language, which I can now feelingly adopt to thyfelf (not from partiality fo much as from a renewed concern for thy prefervation) " My longed for and joy, stand fast in the Lord, my dearly beloved." In feafons like this, we perceive where the mixture lies; the natural part (which cannot inherit the kingdom) blending with a rightly begotten exercife and fympathy with each other. If our most amiable qualifications, and affectionate endearments, are not subservient to, and fanctified by, the refiner of hearts, they are encumbrances to the gospel, and the services of it.

12th month 1789—Accept the expressions of my renewed love and fympathy for, and with thee; the remembrance of thee is precious to my heart, because I comfortably feel thee to be a fellow-traveller towards a city which hath foundations. We must not expect the weather, the roads, and the disposition of our minds for profecuting the journey, to be always pleasant; but we must ever be careful to keep in the way; to travel when light is upon the path; and to rest in the night. We are not to conclude every thing lost which is out of fight; the most valuable grain the earth yields, passes through a temporary death. We are most of us senseless enough, at times, to be objects of the Apostle's roufing address, "thou fool, that which thou fowest is not quickened except it die." Human nature is fo subject to deception, that it can frustrate, by fome pollution or other, almost every dispensation, but death: therefore, be thou faithful unto that, remembering the confequent promife; "thou shalt receive a crown of life."

12th month 1789—I assure thee my heart feels for thee a cordiality, which at times does myself good: for in loving those who love the truth, (as I believe thou dost) we unite ourselves to a chain, the end of which, however remote from the perfection of the divine life, happily connects us with all the living, in seeking after those things which excel in purity and duration. One comfort that attends those who are simply, and singly pressing after the hope of their calling is, that they are not bound to tell all they feel, neither with respect to themselves.

themselves, nor others; it is not effential that they should feek eminence, even in the religious world. They are happily spared the trouble of fuch vain objects, and find that, in folitude of spirit the Beloved of fouls speaks most comfortably to them, and enriches them with most spiritual blessings, which he causes them to enjoy in heavenly places. Oh, how often I covet for myfelf, and my friends, that we may keep facred to these "heavenly places," the gifts of the spirit! Nature is apt to feed upon them, to bask itself in their influence, and congratulate itself in the possession of fuch treasure; when alas! the gold, the precious gold, this way becomes dim, and is often unwifely tinfeled over by the unfanctified affection of the creature. I wish,-that thou and I may possess that love or charity which boasteth not itself, nor is foon extinguished by the changeableness ever to be found in the face of perishing things; but may cherish in ourselves the root from whence every christian virtue springs. Then we may have rejoicing in ourselves, rather than in another, and our mental falutations herein be more frequent than our expressions of them. Thy account of dear is comfortable, she is a truly valuable woman, and will I hope, more and more, shew herfelf to be what she is. Obscurity is not always granted to those who most seek it, it is sometimes a favourable climate for the fruits of humiliation's vallev; but these are in wisdom, and for the good of mankind, often exposed for those that thirst, and have nothing wherewith to buy.

12th month 1789—A week or two after our return from Dublin, A. S. departed this life. We hear she had fore conflict of mind for some days, greatly fearing her suture welfare: so pure did that kingdom appear, when her admired liveliness, and faculty of pleasing ceased; when pleasant pictures of spiritual things were torn to pieces, and the day that burns as an oven came upon them. But this heaviness of spirit was a merciful dispensation; the chastisement yielded peaceable fruit; for before she finally took her leave of visible things, she had to acknowledge unfailing mercies.

12th month 1789-I have feen, in my fhort life, fo much fallacy in human wisdom respecting matrimonial connections, and fo much bleffing showered upon an attention to simple uncorrupted openings, which have not at first appeared most plausible, that I seem to have no faith left in any direction but that which the devoted heart finds to make for peace. In concerns of this fort, it is often very difficult for fuch to judge, because prepossession and inclination are apt to influence our best feelings. Natural affection bears some refemblance of facred impulse; and therefore, methinks that this feed, though ever fo right, must die in the ground before it be quickened and fanctified. In fhort there are few openings, for our and the general good, which have not to pass through this temporary death, few gifts but what are defigned to be buried in baptism, and I wish thee, if ever thou possess a female companion, to obtain her as a fruit of the new creation: that fo thou mayst reap those spiritual advantages which those enjoy, who, through the effectual working of the grace of God, drink together into one spirit, whether in fuffering or in rejoicing; for without this experience, Zion's travellers must find such connections to be secretly burdensome and insipid.

1st month 1790-I rejoice that the Keeper of Ifrael, who fleeps not by day, nor flumbers by night, hath thee under his providential care. This is a fustaining persuasion, a hope in times of trial, which fettles the otherwise toffed mind on the confecrated ground of pure dependance: mayft thou never doubt it, Satan will not fail to affault thee, fometimes in roaring about thy dwelling, and fometimes, with the fubtilty of the prince of the air, feeking to take possession of all within thee, which can possibly incline to disobey the commands of infcrutable and infinite wifdom. Remember he was a liar from the beginning; and invariably opposeth the exaltation of the mountain of the Lord's house. He prefers any hill to this; and had rather we were gathered to the heights of our own imaginations, and the feat of judgment, there to condemn ourfelves, and reason out of doors the convictions of truth, than that we should die daily to the will of the creature, and fit in reverent dependance at the feet of Him who bruises the serpent's head.

Ist month 1790—I want thee to be encouraged, and to put all thy confidence in the everlasting arm. Leave, as much as possible, things that are behind; be content with the present emptines (when it is thy portion) and neither toil nor spin for future supplies. He that clothes the lilies and the grass of the field, is abundantly able and ready, in his own time, to reveal his gracious providence, and minister, from the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, to his slock and family, even through the weak and foolish things of this world; so that things which are not, (minds reduced to a fense of their nothingness) may bring to nought things which are. The christian's strength confists in the favour and countenance of his Captain; and the obtaining of this leads the mind into that abasedness where Satan finds himself discomfited, and his head bruised. "He shall bruise thy heel." Little indeed is in his power, if we maintain the humility, the fimplicity, and holy dignity of a converted foul. Many words are unnecessary at present. The Master, who knows what thou canst bear, will I doubt not give thee thy meat in due feafon, waken thee morning by morning, and cause thine ear to hear as the learned: in all things may he instruct thee to difcretion, and preferve thee in the way whereinto he hath led thee, even that way which truly no fowl knoweth! I know, from a degree of experience, that the farther we get from a dependance upon inftrumental confolation, the more likely we are, with holy certainty, to discover (amidst inward conflicts) the indubitable evidence of being upon the true foundation, the seal of adoption, the white stone with the new name, &c. The very chastisements which introduce the mind to this humbling knowledge, are (when paffed by) fweet to the new taste, as the honey and the honey-comb.

Ist month 1790—I did not forget thee: but truly self was at that time so much the object and subject of my cares and exertions, that if I could but any way keep my head above water thereby, it was more than my doubting mind could at times hope for. Ah, my dear friend, I have a heart prone to rebel against, and live above the pure principle of truth; and because thereof, my spirit is at times covered with mourning as with a garment; and more especially, when I consider the greatness, and the holiness of that Name, of which I venture to make mention in the congregation of the Lord's people. It is mercy, nothing short of mercy, so marvelloufly displayed in the choice of vessels for facred fervices in the church. "He will have mercy on whom he will have mercy:" this truth baffles human reasoning: and therefore, let thee and me covet an increase of the increase of God, and ask in faith for the best gifts. Being afflicted with the impurity of struggling nature, let us come boldly to the throne of grace, to help us in the needful time, and to fettle our spirits in calm acquiescence with, and refignation to, the dispensations of infinite wisdom; that so, from every temptation and tribulation, our fouls may be restored, with this immortal and unadulterated fong, "thy will be done." If we are but as the ram's horns, through which the Shepherd of Ifrael speaks at times to his people, (in concert with his inward and more despised teaching) let us be content, and fimply feek an holy conformity to, and adorning of his doctrine.

2d month 1790—It is not by might or by power, but by the spirit of the Lord, that His work prospers, or his praise is effected; and therefore a little one may be made "a thousand, and a small one a strong nation." Under this persuasion, the faith is strengthened in the Omnipotence of the smallest revelation of the Lord's Arm in our little services, and our trust removed from the appearance of strength, to strength itself. The rich man cannot glory in his riches, nor the strong man in his strength, but the cause of glorying is sound to be in the righteous government and dispensations of our Holy Head. Thy letter brought you all fo much to my mind, that it feemed as if I was with you, sharing in your concerns, and feeling in part that weight of exercife with which dependant fervants are introduced into their field of labour. Now perhaps I may congratulate you on the completion hereof, and participate in that humble rejoicing wherewith Ebenezers are fet up. I fervently defire to possess an increasing capacity to feel with the members of the mystical body, where-ever scattered, or however concealed in the depths of the wilderness from the human eye; for I am persuaded that, as our spirits are regulated by the president of this church, they will, at times, be carried beyond the bounds of observation, to visit the feed in prison.

3d month 1790-Though my heart fympathizes fo nearly and tenderly with thee and thy dear wife, as that I could mingle my tears with yours, yet I dare not utter the language of commiferation, for your late loss of a lovely plant out of your garden; but rather of congratulation for the bleffed experience, that "the eternal God is your refuge, and that underneath are the everlasting arms." Herein I rejoice, and will rejoice that fuch unadulterated confolation is ministered to the poor in spirit. You have a fresh opportunity, my beloved friends, by pure refignation, to commit your spirits, your children, and your fubstance, into divine keeping. May nothing impede the progress and perfection of this work, this glorious work, whereby the fong of the redeemed is learned, and qualification wrought to unite with the heavenly hoft, in proclaiming, that " worthy is the Lord God and the Lamb, to receive riches.

riches, honour, and power, both now and for ever." A mind centred to the fource of instruction, wisdom, and ftrength, can receive little more by fuch communications as thefe, than an outward and visible fign of that inward and spiritual grace, wherewith the foul is replenished, and wherein it finds the substance of all that is truly good. It is nevertheless an allowable accommodation to the weakness of sense, thus to commune; and having, in moments of drooping, been refreshed by thy tender sympathy and salutations, my heart is bound in christian affection to share thy griefs, and hail thee on every renewed accession to the Master's cross, and participation of his crown. Oh my friend, what nailing we take, before we are bound to it! how nature opposes that holy experience of being led as a lamb to the flaughter, and as a sheep that is dumb before its shearers. Hard as the work is, with God all things are possible; and therefore let us watch and be fober, adding to our faith virtue; that when the power is revealed by which we can do all things, we being in readiness, may advance from strength to strength, and finally appear before the Lord in Zion, among those who are fully fanctified. We are now returned from our quarterly meeting, where I trust the gofpel cause did not go backward. We ought not to look for great things; we do not deserve them. And I perceive that when we are most dipped into this fense, life and immortality (being graciously in waiting) are the most sure to be brought to light. Therefore let us be humbled under the mighty hand, that we may be thus truly exalted in due time; yea, in all our provings, let us fink down into our own nothingness, and value every dispenfation fation which clothes us with it; for then, methinks, we shall learn in every thing to give thanks.

3d month 1790-Thou hast, my dear friend, of late appeared to me to be preparing to fet out, according to the facred counsel of the great Master to His disciples, without scrip or purse, or two coats, reduced to a fimple dependance upon renewed fupplies from the holy treafury, and learning, in a new line of fervice, to live by faith. Mayst thou increase in the certain knowledge, that the Lord is gracious unto fuch humble faithful walkers before him. I feel a confidence that it will be fo, and that thy feet will grow more and more conspicuously beautiful upon the mountains; because they are, beyond all shadow of doubt, shod with the preparation. of the gospel of peace, and through adorable kindness, washed for the service on which thou art now fet out: therefore gird up the loins of thy mind, and hope to the end. Do not be afraid of the gloomy exercifes into which thy mind may often be baptized. Remember that even the great Master, who knew without fear or doubting that he should glorify the Father, groaned in himself before he raifed Lazarus from the dead. Do, I entreat thee, offer thyfelf up freely, and do not feek to cut thy matter shorter than is consistent with thy peace. Look forward and not backward; for if I am not miftaken, thy progrefs in the work whereunto thou art called, is not defigned to be as flow as fome thou mayest esteem thy cotemporaries; and it is as great an evil to take from the words of the prophecy of the book, as to add to them.

3d month 1790—Your many testimonies of affection for us, your repeated accounts respecting yourselves,

yourselves, and, above all, your steady increase in faving knowledge, of which we are perfuaded, are frequent occasions of humble thankfulness to the Father of mercies, whose bleffings, variously showered upon you and us, are worthy of reverent commemoration, and grateful inquiry, what we shall render unto him therefore. It is little, very little, that we can do for so bountiful a Shepherd; nor does He, bleffed be His name, require at our hands what He has not furnished us with ability to perform: but that little, let us present at, or cast into the secret treasury, not doubting His compassionate acceptance. An humble refigned spirit is a gift which, I believe, was never refused at the altar. It is, while preserved, a continual offering, a fweet fmelling facrifice, the fayour of life unto life in those that believe; it is a bulwark or fortress, where, in times of desertion, temptation and tribulation, the weary foul finds shelter, and all the armour of light against Satan's attacks and fiery darts. Now, my beloved friends, my heart feels you as companions in the christian path; and in your exercises, your discouragements and poverty of spirit, I participate; though distant in the outward, yet as the Apostle said, " present in spirit." -Be affured that the same afflictions are measurably accomplished in every true member of the mystical body. You have companions therein, and need not be told, that all these things are intended for our refinement, and increasing usefulness and service in the church militant here on earth: that when this mortal shall put on immortality, the tribulated spirit may obtain an eternal refidence, in the glorious church triumphant, where all tears are wiped away: these are animating considerations, and prompt us to endure endure hardness like good soldiers of Jesus Christ, and to receive with thankfgiving every humiliation and spiritual baptism. I know, dear friend, that if thou art mercifully kept quick in understanding in the fear of the Lord, the weak, unconverted state of many of your members will occasion thee to go mourning on thy way, at the fame time that thou finds a necessity to attend to that command of the great Master, to wash and anoint rather than appear unto men to fast. This hidden exercise of spirit will espouse thee more closely to the heavenly bridegroom, who hath the spirit of wisdom and understanding, and who judges not after the fight of the eye, or the hearing of the ear. I do hope, my beloved friends, that your labours will be bleft though yourselves think them very weak and small. If our treasure is but laid up in heaven, no matter how little our corrupt hearts are entrusted with the knowledge of it. Be not afraid of leaving the sheep and lambs, when the good Shepherd calls to any duty; His care is better than ours, and He can supply all your needs, by the riches of His grace in Christ Jesus our Lord.

4th month 1790—I am comforted in finding that your hearts are knit together like David and Jonathan's, in opposition to every stratagem which Satan may use. As I do believe the cement is composed of materials acceptable to the penetrating eye of the great Preserver of men, so I trust you will feel your union to be a balm through the future steppings of christian and social travel, however it may please infinite Wisdom to dispose of you, as to your outward settlements, or journeyings in the present world.—Settle it in thy heart to expect a mixture of bitterness in that cup of comfort, which the great Master may minister to thee. No deadly forrow is in the bleffing; but evil things, and mutable things, until our purification is complete, have a power over us which keeps our spirits in a state of profitable groaning; and if we do but experience the fulfilling of that gracious promise, that for the cryings of the poor, and for the sighings of the needy, he will arise, let us thank him and take courage.

My beloved——'s letter came at a time more acceptable than would be prudent for me this way to describe. It renewed that precious participation of each other's exercifes and confolations, which I do believe originates in the Fountain of everlasting love. I look with humble admiration at that holy hand which is leading thee about, and instructing thee; and my faith is strong that the Lord will keep thee as the apple of his eye, and, in his own time, make all clouds of discouragement as the dust of his feet. Thou knowest and thou wilt more and more know, that, for the right performance of any religious fervice, we want emptying from veffel to veffel; and when we confider how many have fuffered by an imperfect experience of this great work, we ought not to lament at any dispensation, or change of feafons, which brings us, in the leaft degree, nearer to that state and stature, for which infinite kindness designs us.

5th month 1790—That measure of conversion which is effentially necessary, rightly to introduce us into every new line of service, bears a strong resemblance to the sirst step of the great apostle into the christian religion: a light shone around him;

fuch conviction feized his foul, that whilft he asked, "who art thou," he called him Lord; he confulted not with flesh and blood: happy refignation! which however, did not keep him out of the ftreet called Strait, neither for a time were his eyes fuffered to be opened .- We have each our peculiar exercises, as we have each our peculiar infirmities; all which, through fanctification and purification of heart, may help us forward to a final fettlement in that glorious city, whose inhabitants no more fay they are fick .- I hope thou wilt not draw back from any opening to duty, which thou mayest be favoured with. The right time, and our time, do not always agree; but we ought invariably to bear teftimony to the first, by the subordination of the latter. "Wisdom is justified of her children;" and therefore do not reason unprofitably upon thy duty.

7th month 1790—It was pleasant to be informed of thy safe landing in Ireland. I hope thy drooping mind has been refreshed, not only by the strengthening sympathy of fellow-travellers, but also by the composing, and yet animating virtue of Shiloh's streams, and that thou hast been enabled to lie down beside these waters which run softly. Thou knowest that when we can get here, it is like getting home, to a joy with which no stranger can intermeddle. The increase of such a capacity is what my soul longs for; that in this exercising journey before us, wherein creaturely efforts can do little for the promotion of the great cause, the pure seed may, from place to place, be at least secretly visited; and that whether effects may be seen or not, the work, in divine condescension, may be hid with the Lord.

11th month 1790—The comfortable evidence thou mentions, of there being a power strong in proportion to thy weakness, strengthens my declining faith, and encourages me to lay hold on the fame bleffed hope, because it met the witness in my heart that fays it is the truth. A confidence so precious is not to be cast away; it is defigned for an anchor to the poor veffel, fecretly attaching it to eternal help, when, in divine wifdom, its course is restrained on the waters of affliction and uncertainty. Then let me fay, cast not away thy confidence, for therein is great recompense of reward. We are often tempted to do this; fometimes, in the multitude of objects, forgetting the great fource of good, and means of prefervation; and at others, looking fo timidly and doubtfully at them, as to lose our interest in both. May thou and I, watch against these and other evils; and pray, according to our measure of faith, that that spirit may preside in us, which can rejoice in God alone, though none elfe regard it, or can own its life.

overflowings, ferves but to augment thy lamentation; for thy thirst cannot be satisfied with that, which is not the " well in thee fpringing up into everlafting life." I am glad thou art refolved to be patient; if thou holdest thy integrity herein, and lettest patience have its perfect work, thou wilt find more perfection in this difpensation than is manifest at present, and moreover thou wilt lack nothing. Then be of good cheer, my beloved friend: believe in the fatherly care and compassion of Him who is the Lord Almighty; and doubt not that all His chaftisements are the more indelibly to fix the feal of adoption upon thy fpirit; whereby thy qualifications may be strengthened to cry Abba, Father! in proportion to the increase of thy fervices in and for His Name. Were not the experiences of the Lord's dealings to us as individuals fomewhat deep, there might be more danger of stumbling in the paths of judgment, when, for the welfare of others, we may be turned into them; and marvel not if, after this baptism with which thou art baptized, the Master, who is rich in mercy, and inferutable in wifdom, calls upon thee for some new act of dedication. Until then, fight the good fight of faith; now is thy time to prove the sufficiency of thy ever victorious Captain. Resolve if thou perish, it shall be at His sootstool. Let not out thine ear to the accuser of the brethren, believe him not, even respecting thyself, when he tells thee that thou art not what thy friends take thee to be. But if the Father chastens, and draws thee from man's judgment, by shewing thee the fallibility thereof, cleave to him as to thy best friend. Experience will convince thee, that whoever stand through through the storms attendant on their pilgrimage for the honour of the great Name, must learn to pass through good report, as well as evil report; with an equal neglect of it as such; for the weapons of their warfare being spiritual, they must not fail to apply them to the spiritual wickedness in the high, but secret places of their own hearts. Self is apt to feed upon the manifest unity of our friends, and to draw our attention from the pure and strengthening virtue which supplieth every joint of the mystical body; rendering us less capable, than we otherwise should be, of eating that bread which the world knows not of.

I have a comfortable hope respecting thy prosperity and preservation, and already rejoice in the fymptoms thereof. That one especially, of the passing away of the old heavens and the old earth, is fo favourable, that I trust thou wilt fully refign thyfelf thereto, that so they may be remembered no more, nor come into, to way-lay thy mind in any of its preparations for gospel service. Yes. my heart can feel with thee, in thy frequent incapacity to rejoice in even the purest friendship, or to support it by the effusions of natural affection. Oh that all whose hearts and tongues have been animated with the live coal from the facred Altar, had fully passed through dispensations of this fort; methinks the priefthood, and other living members in the church, would be more burning and shining lights, have more true christian sympathy for each other, and oftener meet one another in the field of spiritual exercise, or, in other words, enjoy the true communion of faints. We miss many of the excellent promises of the gospel, for want of coming to, and dwelling in, that humbled fituation of mind to which they belong. How many fit in judgment. who never fufficiently, by virtue of the meekness of their spirits, were guided in the midst of its paths! How often do we hear attempts to fing the praise of Zion's King, by those whose general conduct bears no testimony to a fervent travail of their spirits after deliverance from the enemies of their own houses, and who consequently cannot stand upon its banks. Though I often fear it is the case, I dread to fettle down (because it sometimes appears to be my duty to shew unto others their transgressions) as if the work was done at home, and my foul's adverfary overcome; when, peradventure, his force is redoubled, and his artifice herein more than ever effectual. "Watch and pray," fweetly occurs to my mind, and for this good end, "that ye enter not into temptation;" that the veffel may be preserved in fanctification and honour, and that the immortal birth may have its habitation in a purified temple. Then may the new heavens, the new earth, and the holy mountain, in times of refreshing, break forth into singing, because the Lord comforts his people, and hath, mercy upon his afflicted.

